

Apple releases new iPads with face ID, USB port

►Available Nov. 7, the new iPad Pro models eliminate the home button, lighting port and audio jack, but include a USB-C drive.

CUPERTINO – As expected, Apple revamped and expanded its iPad Pro lineup at Tuesday’s event in Brooklyn.

The premium tablets now come in three sizes: a brand-new 11-inch model that starts at $799; a redesigned 12.9-inch version that now starts at $999; and the 10.5-inch model from 2017 that remains priced at $649.

The new iPad Pros can be ordered immediately and will ship on Nov. 7.

The two models announced Tuesday have a new design featuring rounded corners, thinner bezels and a slightly slimmer profile. The home button is gone, replaced by Apple’s Face ID authentication technology, and the Lightning port and headphone jack are out, replaced by USB-C.

Inside, the new iPad Pros are packing considerably more power, driven by Apple’s new eight-core A12X Bionic processor that supports its Neural Engine technology, also found on late-model iPhones.

Storage capacity now tops out at 1TB. The Apple Pencil stylus has also been updated, and now features wireless charging.

With this redesign, Apple has doubled down on the iPad Pro’s strengths, equipping creatives with tools backed by serious processing power, and ramping up its capabilities for AR and gaming.

Apple also announced a new MacBook Air, which starts at $1,199. That means that the new 12.9-inch iPad Pro now costs as much as the previous-generation $999 MacBook Air, reinforcing the company’s desire to position its premium tablet as a true laptop replacement.

That noted, Apple’s magnetically attachable Smart Keyboard costs extra -- the 11-inch model is $179 and the 12.9-inch version is $199.

Maxed-out configurations cost $1,899 -- and that’s before adding accessories.

Apple hopes the revamped iPad Pro will be better positioned to compete with contemporary tablets like Microsoft’s Surface Pro 6, which starts at $899, and Google’s Pixel Slate, which starts at $599.

But it’s also important for Apple to re-establish the Pro as a higher-end device after adding Pencil support and a faster processor to its entry-level iPad back in March.

Since then, the $329 iPad offered many of the features that were once exclusive to the considerably more expensive 10.5-inch Pro and 12.9-inch Pro models, which started at $649 and $799, respectively, coming in to Tuesday’s event.

With the new design and features announced today, Apple has restored some of the premium that separates the basic iPad from the Pro lineup.

The new iPads also include group FaceTime capabilities, allowing users to video chat with multiple friends or colleagues at the same time.

Norwalk matriarch celebrates 100th birthday

►Neighbors throw a surprise birthday party for Rosie Viega, who turned 100 on Oct. 23.

By Raul Samaniego Contributor

NORWALK – One of Norwalk’s matriarchs celebrated her 100th birthday with the traditional cake and sweets with friends along with a Norwalk touch of a full mariachi band and serenade on Oct. 22.

Rose “Rosie” Viega turned 100 on the 23rd of October, but her neighbors decided to throw her a bit of a pre-birthday surprise party, complete with tears, cakes and of course, a Mexican mariachi band to play some familiar tunes including “Happy Birthday” in both the English and Spanish version, “Los Mananitas.”

Her neighbor and friend, Judy Alvarez, along with fellow neighbors Juan Carlos and Janis Poole, thought it would be great if the neighbors could do something special for the lone centenarian of the street.

They conspired and gathered a couple dozen neighbors who walked down the street following a blue clad band of Mexican mariachis.

Rosie was visibly moved as she wiped tears of joy for she loves all things Mexican.

As a matter of fact, Rosie remembered, “I love to visit my neighbors who are all Mexicans.”

“I learned to make tortillas and loved [refried] beans.”

Having lived in the central Norwalk neighborhood located near Los Alisos Middle School, she remembered coming here after living on a farm near El Centro California a few miles from the Mexican border near Mexicali.

Her neighbor of 60 years, Jim Honodel, reminisced fondly of the neighbor he called, “the matriarch of the street.”

He recalled her daily morning walks where she could be counted on like clockwork. It was during one of these walks where Rosie recalled being robbed as she made her regular route.

“That was several years ago,” she commented.

Now, while she tries to get out as much as possible, some of her neighbors escort her whenever they can. She uses a metal walker, but her spunk is still evident when you speak with her.

In an interview before the musicians arrived, Rosie spoke proudly of her husband, Tony, who passed away about 10 years ago, of his service record during World War II and the not one, but two Purple Heart ribbons he received for being wounded in action.

Altogether, there were several generations of Norwalkians present for her 100th birthday, from infant twins of Leili Romero to youngsters like Judy Alvarez at 72.They were joined by neighbor Maria Chapin who was sporting her favorite team, the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Asked what was the secret of her longevity, Rosie simply replied, “We were homebodies. And of course, working.”

Rosie recently voted for the first time in over 10 years and, well, let’s just keep that secret for now.

Happy birthday, Rosie!

No layoffs planned at Downey Library

►Downey’s library will close for 15 months as part of an extensive renovation; some library operations, however, will remain in place.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY – With the recent announcement of the Downey City Library’s upcoming year-long closure, library officials are saying that there is no need for concern.

Shockwaves were sent flying last week when Mayor Sean Ashton announced that the library would be closing for more than a year to undergo extensive renovations as a part of Measure S, the sales tax increase approved by Downey voters in 2016.

However, Ben Dickow – who took over management of the Library in July of last year – has said that the library’s extended closure has been in the plans for a while now.

“This has been a really aggressive timeline. I think we found out that we were going to be a part of Measure S back in maybe February or so; I think the preliminary design conversations happened in March,” said Dickow. “It’s been sort of an iterative process since then.”

The library is currently scheduled to be closed from March 2019 to June of 2020.

The expansive renovations planned with the addition of the need to store the libraries vast materials have left the library with no choice but to shutter its doors while the changes take place.

It’s also a matter of beating the Measure S clock.

“Measure S has a time limit on it; you have to get these things done in three years, and we’re already half way through the process,” said Dickow. “We realized that we couldn’t split the resources and keep a temporary thing open and do all the renovation.”

“And we realized in order to get the renovation done the way we had to, we had to renovate the whole thing at once...it’s just the way the building is built you can’t do it that way.”

The library will not offer lending services throughout its closure.

Dickow has also said that he has been meeting with libraries in surrounding communities, and that they are aware of the Downey Library’s temporary closure. While he declined to name any one library officially, Dickow said that “all of our neighbors are going to be really good neighbors.”

“They know that we’re going to be down for a while; they’re welcoming to the overflow,” said Dickow. “In order to make it easier for Downey patrons to use their resources, we’ll probably do some library card drives in the final months that we’re open.”

There are even talks on potentially providing transport to other libraries for Downey patrons, however those discussions are still in early stages and are not yet guaranteed.

Dickow has also attempted to quell any anxieties residents might have about library jobs during the over year-long absence.

“All the jobs are staying, everybody is staying on board,” said Dickow. “Thinking about it I can realize why people would ask this question, but it has never been a question.”

In fact, not much – if anything – will be lost according to Dickow, except for the carpet.

California propositions: How I’m voting

By Mario A. Guerra

This November, Californians will have the opportunity to vote for 11 propositions that include rescinding a gas tax, funding for housing projects, reconsidering daylight savings and adding new standards for farm animals.

I am giving a short recap of each and how I’m voting.

Of course, we all share different opinions and views. But the greatness of our country is that we can and should have discussions about things that can influence our lives with proper dialog.

There’s a lot to consider as you prepare to cast your vote by mail or at the poll booth. Here’s a breakdown of all 11. (Note: The propositions are numbered 1–12 but proposition 9 was pulled in July by order of the California Supreme Court.)

Proposition 1: $4 billion in bonds to fund existing affordable housing projects for low-income families and veterans. Adds about $170 million annually to California’s costs over a 35-year period. The total cost of the bond will cost the taxpayers $5.9 billion. There are a lot of pet projects written into this proposition and both sides agree that it will not fix the housing shortage. I’m voting NO for several reasons.

Proposition 2: An act to amend a current law to utilize $140 million per year to fund the No Place Like Home program, which provides housing to the mentally ill who are homeless. The funds would be used to pay back bond debt of $2 billion that funds the program. In 2004, Californians enacted a millionaires tax to be used for mental health. This proposition expands the ways it can be used towards the mentally ill to include housing. I’m voting YES.

Proposition 3: A bond proposal to fund clean sustainable water supplies and storage. The ask is for $8.877 billion with a repayment schedule of $430 million per year for 40-years. Didn’t we pass water bonds just two years ago to do exactly the same thing? And didn’t we just pass a $ 4.1 billion water infrastructure improvement bond on June 5? I won’t be voting on this one.

Proposition 4: Asks for $1.5 billion in funds to help pay for construction, expansion, renovation and equipment for children’s hospitals throughout the state. Costs the state $80 million annually over 35-years to repay. While the cause is noble in name, it just adds to our overall debt that locks us in when the next recession happens. The League of Women Voters is even against it opposing public funds for private non-profit ventures.

Proposition 5: Allows the transfer of property taxes to a replacement home for individuals over 55, the disabled, loss of primary home due to contamination or natural destruction. Will impact schools and local government due to potential loss of tax revenues. The real estate industry is for it as it will allow seniors to move and not be landlocked due to higher potential property taxes, even if they downgrade to smaller homes. I will be voting YES on this. (Full disclosure, I am now over 55 and this could be self-serving).

Proposition 6: Would repeal the 2017 increased gasoline taxes and fees (gas tax) established for public roads. This is the controversial roads additional tax passed by Sacramento last year.

We have been basically paying this for the past 20 years but now all the money that was directed towards this were not fulfilled for the intended use. Using road money on a train that is billions over what we voted for does not make sense to me. Of course our roads need to be fixed but we are currently paying for this and have been doing so for a long time.

The mismanagement of our roads money needs to stop before we give more to our legislature. I was in Florida last week and saw gas prices at the $2.62 level per gallon. This morning the average cost per gallon in the Los Angeles area per Gasbuddy was $3.84 per gallon. That will cost the average family over $800 annually including car fees. It disproportionately impacts those who least can afford it. I will be voting yes on this proposition.

Proposition 7: Would align California with federal law related to daylight savings with no fiscal impact to the state. This doesn’t really matter since it would take an act of congress to change it. I’m neutral on this and resent that we are wasting taxpayer dollars on this ballot measure to take a public opinion poll.

The California legislature should not waste their time with things that cannot happen.

Proposition 8: Establishes limits on charge amounts dialysis clinics have for treatment. This is a controversial proposition as opponents including the state’s nurses association and medical association charge the proposition will actually increase the risk to patients by not providing full treatments. Like everything else it takes reading the fine print to get the real reasons we are having this discussion.

Since this is such a vital medical service I hesitate to vote for changes without having vetted the potential alternatives. I am voting NO on this one.

Proposition 10: Rent control enactment would repeal current restrictions faced by cities and other local jurisdictions. I really do believe this will make the housing problem a lot worse and will impact the potential building of new housing. I also believe that each local municipality should always have control on such decision in their own cities.

I will be voting NO on this because I believe it will hinder those who need the help the most.

Proposition 11: This would require private-sector ambulance operators to have their hourly paid employees on-call during standard break-time. It seems to be a labor dispute and I’m surprised we are voting on such an issue. It will slightly lower EMT contract cost and save local government some undetermined dollars. I will be voting YES.

Proposition 12: This would set a standard for caging and/or confinement of specific farm animals with a prohibition on sales of animals confined outside of the new standards. This adds new regulations to Prop 2 voted in by the voters in 2008. I will be voting NO on this not because I don’t care but because Prop 2 did a lot to protect our egg laying hens.

I know it’s a lot to digest. But very important that we look at both sides and who put the initiatives on the ballot. The TV commercials all seem to make sense (on both sides) but we need to look deeper and not be influenced by who has the most money. We have voted in things we have regretted in the past and our costs continue to escalate on many of them.

This is the time for us to do our research. Be informed and research your candidates, your local ballot initiatives and the big propositions that affect all of us.

And please, go out and vote. In our unique and great country we are privileged to have this amazing right!

Revoking birthright citizenship would be self-defeating

By Steve Chapman

Donald Trump and his more ardent supporters don’t like undocumented foreigners. So they have an ingenious idea: Create more of them.

That would be the result of his plan to restrict birthright citizenship by executive order. When unauthorized migrants come, they are denied a legal place in American society — but any children they have here automatically become American citizens. If Trump had his way, they, like their parents, would be consigned to unlawful status.

The number of people who would be affected is significant. In 2014, reports the Pew Research Center, unauthorized parents accounted for some 275,000 births — 7 percent of all births. If these children were denied citizenship, we would add that many new undocumented foreigners each year. If the change were applied to children previously born to parents who were here illegally, the number would jump into the millions.

To call Trump’s idea half-baked is to exaggerate the time it spent in the oven. The 14th Amendment says, “All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States.” The sole exception is for babies born to foreign diplomats, who are not “subject to the jurisdiction” of the U.S.

The Supreme Court settled the issue in 1898, in the case of a man born here to Chinese parents, who could not become citizens because of the Chinese Exclusion Act, an infamous artifact of racial animus. He left to visit China, and the U.S. government barred him from coming back, claiming he was not a citizen.

But the court ruled that having emerged from the womb in San Francisco, he was. The 14th Amendment, it declared, “has conferred no authority upon Congress to restrict the effect of birth, declared by the Constitution to constitute a sufficient and complete right to citizenship” (emphasis added).

Anti-immigrant advocates fantasize that this policy entices foreigners to come and bear “anchor babies” who will ensure them safe haven. In fact, parents here illegally are subject to deportation regardless of whether their children have citizenship. The “anchor” is not attached to the boat.

From the alarms, you would assume pregnant women are lounging on the far bank of the Rio Grande, waiting for labor pains to begin so they can wade across to deliver. But the Pew Research Center found that in 2009, 91 percent of such births were to parents who had been in the U.S. for two years or more.

Undocumented couples bear children for the same reason other people do: They want them. Their desires and decisions would be the same even if birthright citizenship were eliminated.

Limiting it would not reduce the problems associated with unauthorized migration. If you want foreigners to speak English, adopt American customs and not undercut American workers, denying them citizenship would be supremely self-defeating.

The change would push these individuals into the shadows, deterring them from normal interaction with the rest of us and diverting many to the underground economy. It’s a mistake made with Turks admitted to work in Germany. For decades, Germany barred them and their descendants from becoming citizens, impeding their assimilation.

Granting those born here automatic citizenship, by contrast, gives them every reason to become full, contributing members of society, as most children of immigrants are.

A 2013 Pew survey found the offspring of Asian and Hispanic immigrants to be “much more likely than the immigrants to speak English, to have friends and spouses outside their ethnic or racial group, to say their group gets along well with others, and to think of themselves as a ‘typical American.’” Their median household income exceeded the national median.

There is also the phenomenon of “birth tourism,” when wealthy people from abroad travel here purely to gain U.S. citizenship for their soon-to-arrive infants. It infuriates some Americans, but what’s the downside?

If the gripe is that undocumented interlopers break immigration laws, get government assistance and remain here for good, the critics should be glad to see foreigners come on valid visas, pay their own costs and leave promptly. If we see such behavior as a problem, though, we could deny visas to pregnant women or make it a crime to come here for the purpose of giving birth.

Birth tourism may be unwelcome, but it’s not a problem that justifies discarding a noble constitutional rule. The greater problem is Trump’s urge to discard noble constitutional rules.

World Series games don’t have to take so long

By Steve Chapman

Once upon a time, the postseason provided fans the opportunity to see baseball at its best. Today, it gives us the chance to watch mound visits and pitching changes at their most.

In Game 1 of the World Series, the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Boston Red Sox deployed 12 pitchers. By comparison, when the Dodgers and the New York Yankees met in 1963, they needed only 11 pitchers to get through the entire series.

Over the four-game sweep, the LA starters covered 35 1/3 innings. A single reliever was needed, to get a grand total of two outs.

Watching managers take the ball from one pitcher and hand it to another is about as exciting as watching someone buy snacks from a vending machine. Baseball has always been a game in which most of the actual playing time features a lot of people standing around waiting for something to happen. Now each game features a lot of people standing around waiting for the game to resume so they can stand around waiting for something to happen.

It’s as though Major League Baseball, responding to the perception of many people that the game was slow and tedious, decided to address that complaint by making it even ... slower ... and ... more ... tedious.

This is not just a postseason phenomenon. Starting pitchers, not so long ago, used to manage the heroic feat of lasting nine innings on a regular basis. In 1993, Chuck Finley led the majors with 13 complete games. In 2018, eight different guys tied for the lead, with two. Next year, I predict, all pitchers will be tied for the lead, with zero.

During the National League Championship Series, the Milwaukee Brewers took this trend to its logical endpoint by sending out a starter for the express purpose of facing exactly one batter — after which he was excused for the evening to gleefully calculate his per-batter earnings.

Not only does the plethora of pitching changes foster boredom; it stretches games out to epic lengths. Game 1 took three hours and 52 minutes. That’s six minutes longer than the film “Gone With the Wind” — which, when it came out, was the longest movie ever made. Game 1 took just three minutes less than it took to play the last two games of the 1963 series.

Maybe there are some fans who get a thrill every time a manager makes the long hike to send his pitcher to the showers. For everyone else, I have a suggestion that would speed things up: Stop letting relievers throw warmup pitches when they enter the game.

This ritual has been around forever, but it wastes a lot of time. MLB grants two minutes and 55 seconds for a new pitcher to reach the mound and prepare his essential appendage. Every reliever who enters in the middle of an inning robs fans of three minutes of our allotted life spans.

And why does a professional ballplayer need this process? When a backup quarterback trots out on the field, he doesn’t get to make a few practice throws before taking a snap. When a pinch hitter steps to the plate, he doesn’t insist on hitting some soft tosses to hone his stroke. Getting ready is what the bullpen is for, after all.

Abolishing warmup pitches would save a couple of minutes each time a reliever is called, and in the course of what has become a normal game, the minutes would add up. It would also eliminate an empty interlude that holds the attention of nobody in the stands and subjects TV audiences to yet more commercials.

Purists will say that relievers, deprived of their mound tosses, would be less effective. This is probably true. But it’s a feature, not a bug.

If relievers were more prone to missing the strike zone or serving up meatballs, managers would be less inclined to use them. Or they would insert subs more often at the start of an inning, when they are guaranteed warmup time. Either way, the game would move faster, and fewer fans would drag themselves off to bed long before the final out.

If you like baseball as it is now, with frequent delays and interruptions and games that last for days, maybe you’d be even happier dispensing with the players. Then you could direct your full attention to an even more exciting pastime: watching the outfield grass grow.

On This Day...

November 2, 1889: North Dakota and South Dakota were admitted into the union as the 39th and 40th states.

1948: Harry S. Truman defeated Thomas E. Dewey for the U.S. presidency. The Chicago Tribune published an early edition that had the headline "DEWEY DEFEATS TRUMAN." The Truman victory surprised many polls and newspapers.

1962: U.S. President Kennedy announced that the U.S.S.R. was dismantling the missile sites in Cuba.

1983: U.S. President Ronald Reagan signed a bill establishing a federal holiday on the third Monday of January in honor of civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

2001: The computer-animated movie "Monsters, Inc." opened. The film recorded the best debut ever for an animated film and the 6th best of all time.

Ntozake Shange, pioneering playwright and poet, dies

Ntozake Shange, the poet, novelist and pioneering playwright whose landmark choreopoem, “For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide/When the Rainbow is Enuf,” helped generations of women of color discover their voices, has died.

Shange, 70, had suffered multiple strokes in recent years. But she had been on the mend lately, creating new work, giving readings and being feted for her work.

She died in her sleep Saturday morning in an assisted living facility in Bowie, Md., where she lived.

“Zake was a woman of extravagance and flourish, and she left quickly without suffering,” said Ifa Bayeza, her sister who also is a playwright and theater artist. “It’s a huge loss for the world. I don’t think there’s a day on the planet when there’s not a young woman who discovers herself through the words of my sister.”

“For Colored Girls,” which introduced choreopoem into the dictionary, is an empowering series of interwoven poems on love and loss, joy and pain. They were gathered into a show that opened off-Broadway in 1975, and on Broadway in 1976. It has been produced consistently ever since.

Her father said that because of the marketing of the Broadway production, some people mischaracterized “For Colored Girls” as being anti-male. “Pro-female and anti-male are not the same things,” he said.

Born Paulette Williams in Trenton, N.J., Shange hailed from an accomplished family. Her father, Paul T. Williams, was a surgeon. Her mother, Eloise Owens Williams, was a professor of social work. In addition to Bayeza, best known for her play, “The Ballad of Emmett Till,” she is survived by sister Bisa Williams, a career diplomat who served as the U.S. ambassador to Niger; and brother Paul T. Williams, Jr., executive director of the board of the Dormitory Authority for the State of New York.

JAMES KAREN: James Karen, a prolific and beloved character actor whose hundreds of credits included memorable appearances in “Poltergeist” and “The Return of the Living Dead,” has died. He was 94.

Karen’s friend Bruce Goldstein told The Associated Press that he died Tuesday at his home in Los Angeles. He had been battling respiratory ailments.

Few actors had so long and diverse a career. He appeared in Elia Kazan’s 1940s stage production of “A Streetcar Named Desire,” which starred Marlon Brando. He befriended Buster Keaton in the 1950s and had a brief role in one of the silent star’s most unusual projects, “Film,” an experimental short written by Samuel Beckett.

He met Marilyn Monroe at the Actors Studio in New York and filmed a commercial with the Three Stooges. He was directed by Oliver Stone in “Wall Street” and David Lynch in “Mulholland Drive.” His TV credits ranged from “Dallas” and “The Waltons” to “Seinfeld” and “The Larry Sanders Show.”

Millions knew him as the friendly man with the glasses in TV ads for Pathmark. Others remembered him as the foreman in “Return of the Living Dead,” the boss in “The China Syndrome” or the notorious Mr. Teague, the real estate developer who moves the headstones -- but not the bodies -- in “Poltergeist.”

Karen was born Jacob Karnovsky in Wilkes-Barres, Pennsylvania. He was interested in theater from an early age and, according to his friend Leonard Maltin, the movie critic, turned down a contract with MGM because he wanted to work on the stage.

JOACHIM ROENNEBERG: Joachim Roenneberg, who led a small team that sabotaged the Nazis’ nuclear hopes during World War II, has died at the age of 99. Norwegian Prime Minister Erna Solberg announced Roenneberg’s death on Sunday, calling him a hero.

In 1943, a then-23-year-old Roenneberg and a team of other resistance fighters parachuted into a snowy mountain range in Norway, skied to the Vemork hydroelectric power plant and bombed its cache of heavy water (deuterium oxide) — a rare fluid the Germans hoped to use in the process of building an atomic bomb.

Roenneberg had fled Norway after Germany invaded in 1940. But he, like many of Norway’s famed resistance fighters, wasn’t content to cede his country to Adolf Hitler and the Nazis. After reaching Britain, he trained with the U.K.’s fledgling Special Operations Executive to learn guerrilla tactics and plot against the occupation.

The chance to strike back came after the Allies designated the Vemork plant a crucial target because of its place in Germany’s war plans. And when dozens of British commandos were killed trying to neutralize the plant in late 1942, the decision was made to send in Roenneberg and a handful of other Norwegian agents.

The operation’s code name was Gunnerside. It has been hailed as one of the most successful clandestine operations of the war — and it was accomplished without firing a shot. Roenneberg and his team used their mountaineering skills — skiing through treacherous guarded terrain and scaling cliffs to avoid detection — both to destroy their target and to escape the furious pursuit that followed.

The daring operation has inspired stories and books and the 1965 war movie The Heroes of Telemark (named for the region in Norway where the mission took place), starring Kirk Douglas and Richard Harris. Interest spiked most recently in 2014, when Norwegian public broadcaster NRK produced a popular six-part series called The Heavy Water War.

Even as they carried out their intrepid attack, the Norwegian squad knew their chance of succeeding was small — and that they had little chance of surviving. For years afterward, Roenneberg gave credit for the operation’s success to his teammates.

“I couldn’t have a better party to follow me,” he told the BBC in 2013. “We were a gang of friends doing a job together.”

RICHARD VIOLETTE JR.: Richard Violette Jr., a thoroughbred trainer who advocated tirelessly on behalf of racetrack backstretch workers and improved care for retired racehorses, has died. He was 65.

Violette died Sunday at his home in Delray Beach, Florida, after a long struggle with lung cancer, according to the New York Thoroughbred Horsemen’s Association.

Violette had trained Diversify to victories in the Grade 2 Suburban and Grade 1 Whitney handicaps last summer, as well as last year’s Grade 1 Jockey Club Gold Cup. The 5-year-old gelding has earned nearly $2 million, with 10 wins in 16 starts.

Happy 60th Anniversary Josie and Louie Torres

Local couple celebrates their 60th anniversary! A whole lifetime of laughter, tears and triumphs for this Norwalk couple. They planted their seeds here forty eight years ago and through countless victories and tribulations have exemplified what it really means to love and be loved! John Leguizamo’s latest one-man show, “Latin History for Morons,” begins streaming on Netflix this Monday.

Building the show around his desire to help his son with a school project where he has to research Latin heroes from history, Leguizamo launches into abbreviated portrayals of a number of Latin historical figures, and the ways they’ve largely been excluded from historical accounts.
