Chad Smith of the Red Hot Chili Peppers encourages students to follow their passions.

PARAMOUNT – Red Hot Chili Peppers drummer Chad Smith spontaneously joined the Zamboni Middle School band for a jam session on Jan. 17, banging away at the drums to the delight of an assembly of students in the school’s gymnasium.

Smith shared the joy of music with the Zamboni students and encouraged them to pursue their passions during the special visit. Smith, who has been inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, is serving as a Turnaround Artist mentor to Zamboni as part of the Turnaround Arts: California program, which provides support for arts in select schools.

“I started playing the drums when I was 7, but I really got serious about them in middle school,” Smith said. “Finding something I was passionate about pushed me to do well in school. Being an artist can inspire you in all areas of your life.”

Smith was welcomed to the campus by performances from Zamboni’s band and cheer squads. He then made visits to social studies, English language arts, intermediate art and dance classrooms. The classes provided demonstrations to show Smith how they are using the arts to fuel school change. The dance class put on a tap dance show.

Smith urged students to keep performances light and fun because a crowd will always feed off of their energy.

“He was a very fun and cool person,” seventh-grader Isabella Miranda said. “He told us that self-expression is very important and to stay creative. It was cool that even though he’s a celebrity he still cares about us.”

The event concluded with an assembly that featured a brief show from the school band. Smith offered a few remarks before taking questions from students who were interested to know why he was drawn to the drums and how they helped him learn discipline.

Smith said he plans to return to the school in May when Zamboni premieres a performance of the musical “Annie.”

“We are so thankful to Chad Smith for taking the time to experience the arts with our students,” PUSD Superintendent Ruth Pérez said. “Today was a day our children will always remember and may very well spark some of them to pursue their own passions.”

Zamboni was accepted into the Turnaround Arts: California program in spring 2018, allowing it to hire a full-time dance instructor and expand performing arts.

“Our participation in the Turnaround Arts program has introduced our students to so many new experiences that will help them define their own paths to success,” PUSD Board President Carmen Gomez. “I’m excited to see where the program leads our students next.”

Danny grew up in Whittier and La Mirada and his wife Jeri grew up in Norwalk and Downey. They lived in the area in the 50's and 60's; it's ironic that 15 years later they would manage their automotive business just a few miles from where they rode their bikes to school.

While Danny, Jeri and their bulldog Hazel work at the Volkswagen, BMW, Porsche and Audi stores, they have grown the business to 9 dealerships in Southern California adding Subaru, Mini and Volvo. Their son Hutton (the third generation) is now working at McKenna Porsche. Danny and his family have developed close personal relationships with their customers and like to be on a first name basis. He gives out his cell phone number so he can resolve issues or answer questions as quickly as possible. Please stop in, meet the entire McKenna family, and experience the "neighborly" customer service they've become famous for.

A worrisome trend for higher education: declining enrollment

By Jane S. Shaw

A specter is haunting higher education—the specter of declining enrollments. University and college enrollment has fallen nearly 9 percent since 2011, according to the National Student Clearinghouse, and no one is exactly sure why.

The decrease is not that obvious yet because the decline follows many decades of tremendous growth in enrollment. On a website with national statistics, the Department of Education is still describing enrollment growth as positive. It doesn’t report the latest statistics, and enrollment is still well above what it was in 2000. The Department also estimates that enrollment will increase moderately over the next decade.

But the trend is down, according to the Clearinghouse, which tracks admissions of approximately 97 percent of all students and reports more recent figures than does the Department of Education. The decline started with severe inroads into for-profit school enrollment in 2012. That was at the height of a federal crackdown on for-profit schools, led publicly by Sen. Tom Harkin (D-IA). Accusing the schools of aggressive student recruitment and low graduation rates, the federal government forced two large schools to close (Corinthian Colleges and ITT Technical Institute), and the bad publicity led to public doubts about others.

Then the decreases spread to community colleges and nonprofit colleges and universities. Enrollments at four-year public universities are still largely holding even, although there have been sporadic declines.

For private schools that rely mostly on tuition, especially small ones with little flexibility, keeping up enrollment is critical. In December 2017, Moody’s turned its forecast for higher education to negative because higher education revenues were going up only 3.5 percent, compared to a 4 percent increase in expenses. “Net tuition revenue growth will be affected by affordability concerns and limited enrollment growth over the [next 12 to 18 months],” it said.

Some schools have closed in the new environment. In 2015, Sweet Briar College, an elite school for women in Virginia, shocked the higher education world by announcing it was closing in spite of a healthy endowment. Alumnae fought the closure in court, and the school was “rescued,” but total enrollment is only about 365.

Closures in the past couple of years include Burlington College in Burlington, Vermont; Saint Joseph’s College in Rensselaer, Indiana; St. Gregory’s in Shawnee, Oklahoma; Concordia Alabama in Selma, Alabama; and Atlantic Union College in Lancaster, Massachusetts. Mount Ida College in Newton, Massachusetts attempted to merge with Lasell College, also in Newton, but closed abruptly this spring instead.

Shimer College, a Great Books school, has merged with North Central College in Naperville, Illinois. Wheelock College, originally a teachers’ college for women, merged into the much larger Boston University about a mile away.

A few closures a year are not that unusual—about five a year are typical, although in 2015 Moody’s predicted that closures would triple. And Rick Seltzer of Inside Higher Ed detected growing anxiety at the Presidents Institute of the Council of Independent Colleges last January. “Numerous presidents at the institute agreed that they see an increased urgency among their peers interested in exploring significant changes in order to stabilize their colleges’ standing or seek long-term viability,” he wrote. And his publication has just issued a paper on “The Growing Role of Mergers in Higher Ed.”

Enrollment problems don’t threaten the existence of big schools the way they do smaller ones. But they still pose challenges. “Many schools, especially residential schools, operate on a fixed-cost business model, so a 5-percent decline in enrollment can be a really big deal,” said Alana Dunagan of the Clayton Christensen Institute, which follows higher education and is alert to the effects of disruptive technology. Big schools cannot easily reduce their debt service on buildings or readily cut back on administrators. (Hiring adjunct teachers, who now represent more than 40 percent of instructors, does provide some flexibility, but instructional costs are not the largest expense.) State funding is generally lower than before the recession, and in many states, lower enrollment can reduce that funding further.

It’s not completely clear why attendance is falling. With student loan debt nearing $1.4 trillion, could this be the start of the bursting “bubble” that many predicted eight or 10 years ago? Perhaps, but experts point to less dramatic causes and implications.

The biggest factor is probably economics. The country has pulled out of the Great Recession, and employment is booming. Some students—especially adults—may be working instead of going to school. That’s undoubtedly one reason why the most work-oriented sector of public higher education—community colleges—is seeing big declines. Enrollment has fallen by 16.6 percent since 2011, the Clearinghouse reports. Indeed, according to Dunagan, the biggest change in enrollment numbers is coming from adult students going back to work, not from traditional-aged students.

Dunagan points out that businesses, which dropped a lot of training during the recession, are returning to providing training, which reduces the need for outside education. And there was a great rush into community colleges by adults who were laid off in the early years of the recession and wished to retool. This caused enrollments to explode. Those adult students have now either dropped out or completed their programs.

On the other hand, we may be experiencing a “culture shift,” says Stephen Trachtenberg, former president of George Washington University and now a higher education consultant. “College is not the imperative it used to be.” Alternatives may be more attractive, ranging from apprenticeships to even “dirty jobs”—whose reputation has been enhanced by a hit TV show. Coding boot camps illustrate another alternative.

Another aspect of the “culture shift” could be the reaction to protests against speakers, especially conservative speakers like Charles Murray and punitive actions against professors such as Amy Wax of Penn Law School. Last year a Pew Research survey captured one sign of a changing attitude. “Currently, 58% of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents say colleges and universities have a negative effect on the way things are going in the country,” it reported. After highly publicized conflicts and protests over “Black Lives Matter,” the University of Missouri at Columbia experienced a 23 percent fall in its 2016 freshman class and an additional 16 percent decline in 2017. Similarly, unexpected shortfalls at Oberlin College followed a New Yorker article that described it as “a school whose norms may run a little to the left of Bernie Sanders.”

Furthermore, “demographics are a factor, and prices discourage some students,” said Trachtenberg. While the number of 18-year-olds entering college is fairly steady, the numbers do not begin to reach the doubling of enrollment that higher ed experienced over the past 40 years, Dunagan said, as many colleges geared up for ever-increasing numbers. Furthermore, the number of 18-year-olds differs dramatically in various parts of the country—falling in New England but growing in parts of the West and Southwest. New England, which has many colleges, is losing population overall, so there are more schools than students to fill them.

And international students are on the decrease. The number of foreign students decreased by 4 percent between 2016 and 2017, reported the National Foundation for American Policy. It also suggested the slide in enrollment will have a greater impact than other students. It quoted Rensselaer Polytech economist Kevin Shih: “Foreign student tuition revenue is used to subsidize the cost of enrolling additional domestic students.”

If the decline continues, the anxiety of college admissions officers and presidents will build. Perhaps that is why higher education associations are combating the proposed reform of the Higher Education Act, which would put some limits on student loans. They don’t want any other reason for potential students to say no.

Jane S. Shaw was president of the John W. Pope Center for Higher Education Policy until February 2015, when she retired and joined the Pope Center’s board of directors.

Rising crime? We’re getting a wall and guard tower

By Raul Riesgo

It’s good to be rich.

In 2020, The Case, Malibu’s first gated community in more than 20 years, will be opening up. Each of the new homes will have a price tag of $40 million to $60 million, six-foot walls and given the increase in robberies in this area, the community will feature a 24-hour guard tower.

According to the Hollywood Reporter, “Data from the LAPD’s West L.A. Division, which covers Brentwood and Pacific Palisades, burglaries are up 14 percent over the same period in 2017 and up 41 percent over 2016, and the prospect of a 24-hour guard gains appeal.”

Also on the list of new gated communities are The Mountain in Beverly Hills; Park Bel Air property across from the Beverly Hills Hotel and Beverly Park, which is home to Mark Wahlberg, Denzel Washington and Sumner Redstone; and Brentwood Country Estates off Mandeville Canyon Road, where Arnold Schwarzenegger lives. Tom Brady and wife Gisele Bundchen lived there before they sold their home to Dr. Dre for $40 million in 2014.

The Bel Air Crest and Mulholland Estates are also famed for housing A-listers (Jennifer Lawrence purchased Jessica Simpson’s Mulholland Estates home for $8.2 million in 2014) as are several developments in Calabasas like the Oaks, a double-gated community where the Kardashians, Drake and Justin Bieber have resided.

What about the rest of us? Crime is also on the rise in East L.A., South Central, all of Los Angeles County, the Central Valley, and throughout California.

Crime is on the rise because many like the rich, liberal elite vote for soft-on-crime proposals like Proposition 47. That ballot measure reduced many drug and property crimes from felonies to misdemeanors. Fresno Police Chief Jerry Dyer talks candidly about the impact of Proposition 47: “There’s an individual we have arrested 83 times since Prop 47 has passed, all on petty thefts, 83 times. That’s their job, that’s their career, they’re emboldened to do it because there’s no consequences.”

But those nice folks in Malibu voted to support Prop. 47 in a big way, by about 75 percent [3,303 yes – 1,200 no]. In the other proposed and guarded communities, the folks in Beverly Hills voted to support Prop. 47, three to one [4,650 yes – 2,225 no].

Why do the rich keep voting for measures that make it easier for criminals? The rich have the luxury to deal with the possible effects. They can protect their families from behind their gates and walls and protection by armed guards.

Again, what about all the rest of us?

Liberal California

Dear Editor:

I just read some very interesting articles in the Downey Patriot (1/10/19).

First, Judge Napolitano’s “Can the President Alone Build a Border Wall?” He states he can’t because of the U.S. Constitution. My question is, is the constitution of the state of California as binding as the U.S. Constitution? I ask this because of Article 3, Section 6 in the California Constitution. Every elected official from the governor down to the lowest official swore to uphold the Constitution of California either didn’t read it, didn’t understand it, lied, or chose to ignore it.

Can President Trump do as they did?

Next, Cristina Garcia’s “Legislation Would Enhance Oversight of Children in Detention Centers.” Maybe if Ms. Garcia’s Democratic Party would work with our elected President, we wouldn’t be faced with this problem over and over again if they knew they wouldn’t get into the U.S. except by legal means.

No one can look at these children and not feel compassion and hurt for them. But who put them in this horrible situation? Was it not their parents? Some were sent here with coyotes and other undesirable people. Who put children close to the border wall when rocks were thrown and tear gas was used? Those wanting to cross the border were not only from Mexico and Central America, but it is reported that these were people from 111 different countries. Now there is a larger caravan headed to the U.S.

I ask Ms. Garcia and the Democratic Party, is there a limit or do we just accept the rest of the world who want to come here?

Now, last but certainly not least, reading the front page of the Downey Patriot re the sentencing of the one who had a part in the death of Downey police officer Ricky Galvez. I’m furious! It seems to be a pattern of lack of justice in California. Mr. Galvez served his community admirably. Now, because of SB 1437, hundreds of other felons will now be re-tried to lower their sentencing, thanks to the stupidity of many California politicians. Oakland’s mayor should be put in jail too, warning that ICE is coming.

We just got Gov. Brown out of office, now to have one worse. Gov. Gavin Newsom just invited illegals to come here, wanting to give them “free” healthcare. Free to whom?

I wonder if the governor of New York, Illinois and California wonder why people in businesses are leaving their states, or do they care?

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on this property.

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (866)-960-8299 or visit this Internet Web site <http://www.allsource.com/MortgageServices/DefaultManagement/TrusteeServices.aspx> using the file number assigned to this case 2017-02483-CA. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale.

Jack Mahlstede spent more than 42 years coaching in the Whittier school district.

WHITTIER – The Whittier Union High School District community is remembering the life of inspirational educator, mentor and former Santa Fe High School athletic coach Jack Mahlstede, who died Thursday, Jan. 24 after losing a battle with pancreatic cancer. He was 80.

Mahlstede, who dedicated more than 42 years of his career to Whittier Union, began as a varsity assistant football coach for Santa Fe High School in 1969 and became head varsity football coach in 1970. He served as Santa Fe’s head varsity coach for football, track and cross country until 2011, when he retired.

He is survived by his wife, Billie, his two sons, Jeff and Ken, and four grandchildren.

“Jack Mahlstede was a man among men who mentored thousands of kids at Whittier Union, many of whom came from backgrounds where they didn’t feel like winners, but he made them into champions who believed they could conquer anything they set their minds to,” Whittier Union High School District Superintendent Martin Plourde said. “Jack was an inspiration and a shining example of what we strive to achieve at Whittier Union every day. We are lucky to have had him.”

Mahlstede led the Chiefs to 16 football league championships, 12 of which were in the Del Rio League. He also coached track and cross country at Santa Fe High and led the teams to win 10 boys’ track championships and nine girls’ track championships in the Whitmont and Del Rio Leagues in addition to five cross country championships in the Whitmont League.

He earned the title of Outstanding Coach of the Del Rio League several times during his coaching career and was inducted into the 605 All Star Game Committee’s Hall of Fame in 2010.

In 2014, the District dedicated Santa Fe High School’s football field to Mahlstede, a respected role model and father figure to many, including La Serna High teacher and former football player Ken LaVigne.

“He gave me structure and purpose, confidence and encouragement,” said LaVigne, who played under Mahlstede for three years. “He’s the reason I became a coach. I saw what he did for me and I wanted to do the same for others. Other than my father, he is the greatest influence in my life.”

Services are pending.

Remembering John Adams, the first editor and publisher of the Downey Patriot

Ten years ago, Downey lost a loyal friend and fierce community advocate when John Adams died. The former editor and publisher of the Downey Patriot was 69 when he passed due to complications of Parkinson’s disease.

If you knew John Adams, the privilege was all yours. He was the hardest-working man in Downey, a regular fixture at City Council and board of education meetings, where he usually sat in the back of the room, scribbling notes on yellow legal pads. Nobody could read his writing, sometimes including John himself.

He carried with him a Sony digital camera, though most of his shots were rendered unusable due to his trembling hands, a symptom of Parkinson’s. When John hired me as an intern in 2002, one of my duties was to transfer John’s photos from his camera to a desktop computer. I can say with authority that one of John’s favorite subjects to photograph were cute girls.

Yes, John definitely liked women, and he had a penchant for putting pretty girls on the front page of the newspaper. I asked him about this once.

“We need to sell newspapers,” he insisted.

“But John, the Patriot is free,” I replied.

He just grinned.

When John started the Patriot in 2002, the newspaper’s makeshift office was located inside an empty locker room at Columbus High School. The room was cavernous, darkly-lit and carried the faint scent of Ben-Gay, but you couldn’t beat the rent (free). Four aging Dell computers lined the wall where the writers and graphic designer worked, and on the other side of the room were a few mahogany desks for the advertising sales staff, and another table for the receptionist. In the middle of the newsroom was a couch where John sprawled his 6 ft. 4 in. frame.

The first person into the office every morning was the advertising director, Jerry Brady (a no-nonsense board member at the Downey Chamber of Commerce), then myself, and then John. John’s first order of business was always to call the Downey Police Department’s watch commander.

“Anything happen overnight?” John huffed, scribbling on his legal pad.

“Thank you.” Click.

John didn’t use computers, so he typed his stories on a Brother word processor, a relic from the 1980’s with a blinking lime green screen and built-in floppy disk drive. The machine must have weighed 60 lbs. When the processor died, I ordered John another from eBay, paying about $13 for the machine and $70 for shipping.

John’s health progressively deteriorated as Parkinson’s took its toll, making speech difficult. He spoke in short, explosive bursts, his sentences limited to no more than five syllables.

At one point, the police department mistook John as a prank caller and dispatched an officer to the Patriot’s office. After that, then Police Chief Roy Campos helped implement the weekly Crime Report that continues to run in this newspaper.

Like any good journalist, John amassed a network of sources that peppered him with news tips and story leads. These sources didn’t just come from within City Hall and school district headquarters, but from all corners of the Downey community, including non-profit organizations, Little League boards, unions, and civic groups. Everyone trusted John with privileged information and, to my knowledge, no one ever came to regret it.

“You have a right to know what is happening in your local community,” John once wrote. “The First Amendment is not only a right, it is a privilege and a challenge to inform in the best interests of the community and nation.”

John embraced being Downey’s pre-eminent journalist and understood its responsibilities, which is why he continued to report well past retirement age.

Unfortunately, at this point, Parkinson’s had fully ravaged his body and walking was nearly impossible. Refusing the help of a walker, he instead shuffled his feet, grasping at furniture, chairs, and even people to make his way across a room. When he fell, and he fell often, the crash was loud and violent.

“I’m alright,” he’d say through a toothy grin. Then he’d dust himself off and continue as if nothing happened. I’m sorry to admit the sound of John collapsing in a heap became a familiar sound around Downey.

Parkinson’s is a cruel disease. It can destroy a body physically but often leaves the mind intact. To his last days John remained incredibly sharp, consuming literature and poetry, his sharp wit intact for those able to mine it out of him. (Over lunch at Foxy’s one day, John pitched a story titled “The Top 10 Places to Fall in Downey.” He chortled as I rolled my eyes.)

John was a bachelor and lived alone in a small 1-bedroom apartment on Downey Avenue, a block north of the YMCA. In his final year, unable to properly care for himself, he moved into Southland Care Center in Norwalk. Now, instead of calling the police department every morning, he called the Patriot. He was briefed on the news of the day and our coverage plans.

“Good,” he would say. Click.

The phone calls continued until Jan. 20, 2009. John died the following day.

Although John is gone, his legacy continues to inspire the Downey Patriot and guides our pursuit of truth-telling and community advocacy. We’re a small staff, and far from perfect, but our resolve to produce honest journalism for the benefit of the Downey community remains as resolute as ever.

It’s what John would have liked because it’s what John taught us.

Fatima Ali, ‘Top Chef’ fan favorite, was 29

SAN MARINO – Fatima Ali, the fan favorite of the previous season of Bravo’s “Top Chef,” died Friday after a nearly yearlong battle with cancer, the network said. She was 29.

Ali came in seventh on season 15 but won the Fan Favorite title when the season ended early last year. She was known for her “fun personality and excellent cooking” of food from her native Pakistan, Bravo said.

Ali publicly documented her battle with cancer since being diagnosed at the end of 2017 with Ewing’s sarcoma, a type of bone and soft tissue cancer, Bravo said. She had chemotherapy and surgery to remove a tumor and surrounding cells in her left shoulder in January 2018.

Doctors declared her cancer-free about a month later, the network said, but last October, Ali revealed in an online essay that her cancer was “back with a vengeance” and she had a year to live.

“It’s funny, isn’t it? When we think we have all the time in the world to live, we forget to indulge in the experiences of living,” Ali wrote on the website Healthyish. “When that choice is yanked away from us, that’s when we scramble to feel. I am desperate to overload my senses in the coming months, making reservations at the world’s best restaurants, reaching out to past lovers and friends, and smothering my family, giving them the time that I so selfishly guarded before.”

Ali posted pictures of herself during cancer treatment on her Instagram page, sharing her struggle with fatigue even as she flashed a warm smile. She also continued posting pictures of appetizing food, from lamb koftas and kebabs to New York pizza and Korean barbecue.

Her fellow “Top Chef” contestants posted tributes to Ali on Friday. They included chef Bruce Kalman, who wrote, “I will miss you Fat, and you will be in my heart forever. I’ll always remember the great times we had.”

Ellen DeGeneres, who had Ali on her show late last year, posted a picture on Twitter from the interview.

“I was lucky to share this visit with Fatima. I wish I could have shared more. Sending so much love to her family. I hope they find comfort in knowing how much light she brought to the world,” DeGeneres wrote.

Ali left her hometown at 18 to pursue her dream of becoming a chef, the network said in a statement Friday after her death. She enrolled in the Culinary Institute of America and started working in New York restaurants, eventually becoming executive sous chef at Macy’s Stella 34 and La Fonda Del Sol, Bravo said.

She was a contestant on the Food Network show “Chopped” in 2012 and won.

When she first appeared on “Top Chef,” Ali told Bravo, she was hesitant to cook Pakistani food, even though she was passionate about it.

“I wasn’t sure if the judges were even going to be excited about eating that kind of food, but they were, and that really reinforced a lot of faith in the food that I want to cook,” she said.

Ali hoped to open her own restaurant in New York one day.

“I dream of my future restaurant, where the kebabs melt against your tongue and the cocktails are just sweet enough to calm the burn,” she wrote on Healthyish in May 2018. “I have never felt more fulfilled than when I let myself crawl into bed late night after a back-breaking day of cooking.”

In her last Instagram post, on January 10, Ali smiled at the camera from a hospital bed.

“I’m sick and unfortunately I’m getting sicker,” she wrote. “Right now all I need are prayers; prayers that are simple. I hope, because a wish is putting on too much responsibility on the other, that you will somehow find forgiveness in your big heart for whenever I must have hurt you.

“I thank you a million times over for when you have given me joy. I’ll try to keep everyone updated the best that I possibly can.”

The Los Angeles Rams are heading to Atlanta to faceoff with the New England Patriots in Super Bowl 53 as –2.5 point underdogs, according to Vegas.

Although it seems like Tom Brady and Bill Belichick are in every year, it is the first time in over three decades that Los Angeles has a team in the big game. Flashback to just three years ago— Los Angelenos didn’t even have a football team to root for, let alone two playoff teams.

But we are back baby!
It is easy to dismiss the emerging Rams by saying this will be a lop-sided advantage for the seasoned Patriots, who have utterly dominated the playoffs for nearly two decades, but according to the ‘Madden 19’ simulation, the Rams are going to edge New England, 30–27.

The simulation has a proven track record and has been impressively accurate over the years. It has predicted 10 of the last 15 Super Bowl Champs and has even accurately predicted the final scores twice since they began doing the simulation in 2004.

But in order for the Rams to reign victorious and host a championship parade in LA, they will need to put together four good quarters of football and maybe even overtime.

They need to look like they did in the second half against the Saints in the NFC Championship for the entirety of the game if they want to beat Belichick and company, though according to the EA Sports simulation, they will have to rally to come back from a 17–3 halftime deficit.

In reality, the Rams will obviously need a great game out of Goff and Gurley, both, to stand a fighting chance on offense, while Aaron Donald and Ndamukong Suh will need to push the pocket into Brady’s comfort zone quickly and often.

The game will be won in the trenches and very much depends on the Rams offensive and defensive lines.

If LA’s big men are beat at the point of attack and can not get a push, it will certainly be a long day for Sean McVay and his coaching staff.

For Brady, this will be his unprecedented 40th playoff start and his chance at winning his sixth ring. He threw his first playoff touchdown pass 17 years ago against the St. Louis Rams in Super Bowl 36 when he won his first ring.

It seems as though Brady just keeps getting better with age. He has won 11 playoff games in the last five seasons alone and has more playoff wins under his belt than some NFL franchises.

I believe the Rams will need to put up more than 30 points to beat these guys. I predict a Patriot win, unless the Rams can put up 35 or more points.

LBSU rocketry team achieves successful launch

LONG BEACH – Beach Launch Team, a group of Long Beach State University engineering students united by their objective to fire a rocket into low-earth orbit, advanced toward that goal by launching a new student-developed rocket to an estimated altitude of some 6,000 feet.

The rocket, Beach 1, launched Jan. 5 from the Friends of Amateur Rocketry Site near Randsburg, in the desert area of eastern Kern County, Calif.

“The students and mentors have worked tirelessly over the past two years to perfect their design,” College of Engineering Dean Forouzan Golshani said. “The goal is to actually put a rocket into space within three years. This is a very good step toward that.”

Beach 1 features several key components – skin, fins, nose cone and communication software –developed by students attending the Long Beach campus. A mixture of liquid oxygen and methane fueled the rocket.

“The launch was a significant milestone for Beach Launch Team. This was the first launch of a rocket built entirely by the team as an independent, student-run organization. Previously the students worked under close supervision and direction of industry professionals, but this rocket design was 100 percent made by Long Beach State students. This really marks the beginning of a new era for rocketry at The Beach,” said Andrey Ruf, chief engineer for Beach Launch Team.

Lessons learned from the Saturday’s launch will help Beach Launch Team members toward their ultimate goal of victory in the Base 11 Space Challenge, which offers a $1-million prize to the first team of university students from the United States or Canada that sends a single-stage, liquid-fuel rocket into low-earth orbit by Dec. 30, 2021.

“Being a freshman and launching a rocket really gave me a glimpse of what I want to do and the goals I want to accomplish down the line. It felt surreal, seeing this project that various people gave both time and effort to take flight. At the launch site, everyone moved and worked like an industry-grade team with the goal directly set on launching the rocket,” said Christopher Tapia, the launch team’s lab manager.

The team’s success builds upon not only past achievements, but also the lessons learned from scrubbed launches.

“This launch showed people that we are capable of creating a powerful rocket,” said Sean Won, the launch team’s project manager. “These past experiences will guide the team to win rocket competitions. The team is currently reflecting upon the launch to see which areas could be improved for the next vehicle. Most importantly, this must be the best way to start off a new year.”

The National College Resources Foundation and donor Foster Stanback sponsored Beach Launch Team’s effort. Associate professor Praveen Shankar and assistant professor Mahdi Yoozbashizadeh of the Department of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering within the College of Engineering mentored team members, as did Friends of Amateur Rocketry treasurer and aerospace engineer Mark Holthaus.
