Fierro delivers college address

■ Cerritos College president Dr. Jose Fierro reaffirms commitment to students during pandemic.

By Rafael Magana Talon Marks

NORWALK - President Dr. Jose Fierro met with students and staff early on October 28th to discuss the current state of the

In the address, Fierro spoke on the difficulty of running the college during the COVID-19 pandemic and the strides that they have been taking to better serve the students of the college, and community around them.

Dr. Jose Fierro

with one of his opening "What comments: Cerritos College does best is help build runways for Falcons to fly. All Falcon's can fly, some just need longer runways".

Later in the address, he said "We have nearly moved mountains to ensure that students get what they need on time...Commitment to student success has remained strong."

Despite the majority of classes being taught online, some classes necessitate the need to be on campus and in person, as many of these classes are in service of a skill building profession.

A video was presented which featured interviews with Cerritos College faculty in the Culinary Arts programs and the Dental Hygiene program. Many students testified in the video as well.

The video highlighted some of the precautionary measures that Cerritos College faculty and students are taking to protect themselves from COVID, while still being able to get a hands on education, which is vital for those in these programs.

Students and faculty in the video were subject to precautions taken by the college, which include temperature checks every time students are on campus and enforcing social distancing. Personal protection equipment is also provided for everyone on campus.

also Fierro provided information on how they have been making "data informed decisions that will help students graduate on time." These decisions are ones that will essentially accelerate the speed at which students will complete their academic programs.

We're always trying to make sure the girls are doing what they are doing and getting their work in."

Have you had a situation where you walked away from because it wasn't safe.

"No, Blanco: because a challenge with last-minute everybody is trying to do the same. There are a lot of teams out there looking for somewhere to play. They're trying to be as safe as possible, so that they can play. It really hasn't been any kind of situation where they are too unsafe. We're going to err on trying to play more than not."

Practice has been a challenge "Sometimes, we move around," Serna said. "It's kind of frustrating and it could be TBD.

"Sometimes our coaches schedule practice for the pitchers and catchers, which is earlier than the rest of the team."

"Because of COVID in California, we are traveling more," said Serna, who just got back from Arizona, where they played at Arizona State University.

"We're trying our best to stay safe, but we don't know about the other teams and what their situation is at the time.

With a safe reopening underway, California must avoid another shutdown

By Dr. David Gonzalez Jr.

At the start of the COVID-19 pandemic, California quickly became one of the nation's outbreak epicenters. This forced countless businesses to suddenly close down, as Californians remained at home and awaited further public health guidance.

Unfortunately, as the virus spread through local communities, it took its toll in more ways than one. Unemployment soared across the state due to the economic pressures of the statewide shutdown, in turn risking a worse homelessness crisis than the one that was already facing our state. Now, questions still linger as to how California will manage to get back on stable ground, with some estimates pointing to a years-long recovery process.

Thankfully a promising sign arrived at the end of September, as Los Angeles County permitted nail salons, indoor shopping malls, and several other indoor businesses to begin the reopening process. Now, as we continue to use everything we have learned about the virus this year to continue fighting the pandemic, it is vital that California's leaders at both the state and local level create policies that make use of proven methods for limiting the spread of the virus without putting the economy in further danger.

One of the key insights health officials have shared is that a large percent of recent surges in new COVID-19 cases are due to know what another shutdown would bring. small household gatherings, and that Americans are being more careful about taking precautionary measures in public spaces. This knowledge helps to reaffirm that California's recent moves towards reopening safely are the right steps to take. To date, no evidence suggests that indoor businesses and retail locations are the reason for the new growth in COVID-19 cases and, in fact, they are some of the places where health officials' guidance is most strictly observed.

From the start of the pandemic, indoor businesses showed remarkable adaptability, quickly implementing social distancing protocols to ensure shoppers and employees could go about their business safely.

Working in lockstep with recommendations from public health experts, businesses implemented protocols like requiring customers and employees to wear masks and shoppers remained socially distanced in stores. With these efforts, indoor retail and other businesses across the country laid out the blueprint for a safe reopening of our economy.

These efforts are being recognized by policymakers here in California, with local officials such as Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti and the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors, and even statewide lawmakers like Governor Gavin Newsom giving more and more businesses permission to reopen safely.

These are smart moves that will allow us to continue getting the virus under control while alleviating the economic damage that has been felt by families across the state this year.

Now, lawmakers' primary aim should be to continue this reopening without imposing broad new restrictions on indoor businesses or forcing them to close their doors once again. They have shown us that a safe reopening is possible, and we already

The retail industry saw record store closures this year, and shutting them down again ahead of the holiday season would only cement their fate, causing the economy to spiral even further out

In shaping the path to recovery, lawmakers must follow the lead of public health experts. Targeted action that addresses the true sources of outbreaks will put us in the strongest position to bring COVID-19 to heel in California, while broad shutdowns that impose restrictions on the businesses that are working hard to keep people safe will only bring more difficulties.

California's policymakers are on the right path now, and I trust that it is one they will continue to follow.

The government's lust to spy

By Andrew Napolitano

In 2019, agents of the federal and state governments persuaded judges to issue 99% of all requested intercepts. An intercept is any type of government surveillance — telephone, text message, email, even in-person. These are intercepts that theoretically are based on probable cause of crime, as is required by the Fourth Amendment to

The 2019 numbers — which the government released as we were all watching the end of the presidential election campaign — are staggering. The feds, and local and state police in America engaged in 27,431,687 intercepts on 777,840 people. They arrested 17,101 people from among those intercepted and obtained convictions on the basis of evidence obtained via the intercepts on 5,304. That is a conviction rate of 4% of all people spied upon by law enforcement in ostensibly lawful intercept in order to claim that they obtained the United States.

Here is the backstory.

Readers of this column are familiar with the use by federal agents of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act to obtain intercepts using a standard of proof considerably lesser than probable cause of crime. That came about because Congress basically has no respect for the Constitution and authorized the FISA Court to issue intercept warrants if federal agents can identify an American or a foreign person in America who has spoken to a foreign person in another have reposed it for safekeeping happens every day in America. country.

dealer in Brussels, and under FISA, the feds can get a warrant from The statistics I cited above are not from FISA — those numbers are the FISA Court to monitor your future calls and texts and emails.

This FISA system is profoundly unconstitutional; the Fourth Amendment expressly requires that the government — state and federal — can only lawfully engage in searches and seizures pursuant to warrants issued by a judge based upon a showing under oath of probable cause of crime. The Supreme Court has ruled consistently that intercepts and surveillances constitute searches and seizures. crime in the place to be searched or the person or thing to be seized, analyst for Fox News.

The government searches a database of emails, texts or recorded phone calls and seizes the data it wants.

Thus, when the feds have targeted someone for prosecution and lack probable cause of crime about that person, they resort to FISA. This is not only unlawful and unconstitutional, but also it is corrupting, as it permits criminal investigators to cut constitutional corners by obtaining evidence of crimes outside the scope of the Fourth Amendment. The use of the Fourth Amendment is the only lawful means of engaging in surveillance sufficient to introduce the fruits of the surveillance at a criminal trial.

If the feds happen upon evidence of a crime from their FISAauthorized intercepts, they then need to engage in deceptive acts of parallel construction. That connotes the false creation of an lawfully what they already have obtained unlawfully.

Law enforcement personnel then fake the true means they used to acquire evidence — even duping the prosecutors for whom they work — so the evidence will appear to have been obtained lawfully and thus can be used at trial. At its essence, parallel construction is a deception on the court. If the deception is perpetrated under oath, it is perjury — a felony.

This corruption of the Constitution by those in whose hands we

The FISA-induced corruption has regrettably bled into the Call your cousin in Florence or a bookseller in Edinburgh or an art culture of non-FISA law enforcement, and even into the judiciary. secret. Rather, the statistics reflect the government's voracious appetite for spying that now pervades non-FISA law enforcement. This is so because judges accept uncritically the applications made before them for intercept or surveillance warrants.

> Thus, even though the Fourth Amendment permits judges to issue warrants only upon the probable likelihood of evidence of a the attitude of what constitutes probable cause has been attenuated by both the law enforcement personnel who seek warrants and the judges who hear the applications. We know this because we have not seen a number like 99% of all warrant applications — every one supposedly based on probable cause of crime — granted. Nor have we seen only 4% of those intercepts resulting in convictions.

The rational conclusion is that the government's appetite for surveillance remains voracious, and judges — whose affirmative duty it is to uphold the Constitution as against the other two branches of government — have done very little to abate this.

So, what becomes of the remaining 96% of those on whom the government spied? That depends on whether the government charges anyone. If a person is charged and acquitted, and law enforcement unlawfully obtained evidence against that person, his remedy is either persuading the court to suppress the evidence thus resulting in the acquittal, or suing the law enforcement agents who unlawfully spied on him.

Yet, under current Supreme Court decisions about who can sue the government, if the government has spied on you and not charged you and not told you, you have no cause of action against the law enforcement agents who did this.

Stated differently, in 2019, at least 760,739 people in America were spied upon pursuant to judicial orders allegedly based upon probable cause of crime and were neither charged nor informed of

My Fox colleagues often deride my attacks on those who fail to safeguard our privacy because they argue, we have no privacy. If we expose its violation, we might know the joys of unmonitored personal fulfillment.

Trump, Biden more similar than you think

By Veronique de Rugy

Once again, Election Day in America has come and gone with some lingering questions as to when the results will be certified. In the run-up to the presidential contest, each side overflowed with hope about the many wonders its guy, once in power, might bring about. Unfortunately, for those of us who prefer smaller government — for those of us who value individual liberty as an end in itself — neither candidate really promised fiscal solvency or less government interference in our lives.

Despite corporate tax reform, deregulatory efforts, some criminal justice reforms and an anti-socialist rhetoric, President Donald Trump has shown little interest in free market policies. His administration promised and failed to get rid of the Affordable Care Act and would have likely replaced it with what is best described as Obamacare Light. With the Republicans' support, Trump opened wide the spending spigot for the Pentagon and its defense contractors. Ditto for other kinds of spending, much of which was irresponsibly funded with debt.

And don't forget: Although the prepandemic economy was growing steadily and wages were increasing, the government's budget deficits almost doubled on Trump's watch. This fiscal incontinence is inexcusable.

Further, Trump's trade policy has been notoriously ignorant and destructive. His administration erected harmful barriers to trade, which — as any competent economist could tell you — increase prices for consumers. And the president's tariffs failed to achieve their stated goals of bringing manufacturing jobs back to the United States. Of course, Trumpian immigration policies have been horrendous and even inhumane.

A second Trump term could bring more of this bad stuff, along with additional layers of likely government interventions. One could anticipate an intensified push for industrial policy — that is, government picking industrial "winners." Also on tap would be the attempted arbitrary repatriation of medical and other supply chains.

As demonstrated during the past four years, rather than draining of the swamp as candidate Trump promised during his 2016 campaign, he and his team have filled it. He hasn't hesitated to  $indulge-at\ taxpayer\ expense-all\ manner\ of\ cronies,\ from\ Boeing$ executives to steel moguls. In a second Trump term, such cronyism would surely continue, along with his chaotic style of governing, his narcissism and his unpresidential tweets. And let's not forget that, like Presidents Barack Obama and George Bush before him, Trump would continue his first-term abuse of executive powers by ruling arbitrarily through executive orders.

Joe Biden, on the other hand, should also scare smallgovernment types. He never really cared about enhancing freedom in the almost 50 years he served in the Senate and White House. If elected president, he'd want to implement an "ambitious" agenda to grow government's size enormously. The Manhattan Institute's Brian Riedl calculates that the Biden plan could raise national government spending over the next decade by an additional $11 trillion. It would do so chiefly by expanding the Affordable Care Act, reducing Medicare eligibility to 60, further increasing spending on climate issues and infrastructure, and pouring more government largesse into college and K-12 programs, among other things.

Biden would also likely be as protectionist as Trump. For evidence, note that this darling of the left supports "buy America" requirements. Also, there's no doubt that his administration would indulge cronies. I'm willing to bet that this fact could be on display, if a Biden administration is sworn into office, with the new president putting his signature on a bill to extend bailouts to airline shareholders and creditors while being cynically marketed as assistance for workers.

There are many other similarities between both men. They both have anti-freedom and anti-choice agendas. Nick Gillespie of Reason puts it best. He writes: "If Donald Trump wins, antiimmigration, anti-abortion, and protectionist Republicans will continue pushing their largely unpopular agenda in Washington. If Joe Biden wins, then anti-capitalist, anti-school choice, and proregulation progressives will rush to pass legislation similarly out of sync with America's more centrist electorate.'

Finally, this quote from the great H.L. Mencken comes to mind: "Government is a broker in pillage, and every election is a sort of advance auction sale of stolen goods." So, the question is, which candidate will let you keep more of your stuff. Or maybe in this particular election, it was mostly about competence and character. Either way, it is depressing.

Sean Connery, legendary James Bond actor, dies at 90 Sean Connery, an actor who became a superstar for his portrayal of James Bond in "Dr. No" and six other films in the classic spy series, died in his sleep Oct. 31. He was 90.

So iconic was Sean Connery's portrayal of the famous gentleman spy James Bond that 1960s audiences didn't always even know the actor by his name. He was simply Bond, as the first to play the character on the big screen, leaving big shoes to fill for the actors who would follow.

Connery was Bond in the first five film adaptations of author Ian Fleming's enduring character: "Dr. No" (1962), "From Russia With Love" (1963), "Goldfinger" (1964), "Thunderball" (1965), and "You Only Live Twice" (1967). He returned for two more Bond outings in later years: "Diamonds Are Forever" (1971) and "Never Say Never Again" (1983).

The ruggedly handsome Scotsman wasn't exactly what all of Fleming's readers had pictured in their minds as they read his books. He wasn't who Cubby Broccoli and Harry Saltzman, the producers of "Dr. No," pictured either. They wanted Cary Grant, whose debonair and refined British good looks seemed the essence of Bond. But Grant didn't want to commit to a series of films - and Connery, though he was none too thrilled about the idea of a series either, was willing.

Connery reportedly showed up to his meeting with the producers looking scruffy and rumpled, quite the opposite of anyone's vision of Bond. But his physical presence, one that has been called magnetic more than once, sealed the deal. And as it turned out, Connery cleaned up extremely well when the time came to don a suit and embody Bond.

Contemporary reviewers weren't sure, when "Dr. No" arrived, whether they liked Connery for the part or not. The Guardian thought Connery, "though he very nearly looks right, sounds all wrong (with his slightly Irish, slightly American accent)." The Daily Telegraph asserted, "Sean Connery plays this prize phoney as convincingly as any actor could who does not stand 6ft 6in in his

Of the contemporary British reviewers, Penelope Gilliatt at the Observer was the most on-board with Connery: "Sean Connery plays Bond, lean and lecherous. It sounds like a piece of miscasting, but he does it with the right sophisticated self-will and takes a good deal of the greed out of the character."

All in all, not bad reviews for a man with no formal training, who didn't begin acting until he was in his twenties. He tried a lot of other things first: He was a milkman, a sailor, a lifeguard, an artist's model, even a coffin polisher. He was a bodybuilder who competed in a Mr. Universe competition, and he was a talented footballer who was offered a contract with Manchester United.

But he was also pulling in some extra money helping out backstage at Edinburgh's Kings Theatre. The job led to an interest in appearing on the other side of the curtain. He auditioned for, and won, a small role in a production of "South Pacific." The experience led to larger stage roles where he worked on his acting chops and made connections, and acting started seeming like a better bet than sports. Connery eventually found his way to the movies, with his first credited role in 1957's "No Road Back."

Other early films include Disney's "Darby O'Gill and the Little People" (1959), "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" (1959), and "The Frightened City" (1961). And then he found his way to Broccoli and Saltzman, and two legends – Bond and Connery – were made.

The Rise of Bond

"Dr. No" was a moderate success, but James Bond wasn't yet the household name he'd become - neither was Connery - and a Bond film wasn't a guaranteed blockbuster. That would begin to change when "From Russia With Love" was released the following year. Fans and critics liked it, and it did well at the box office.

'From Russia With Love" would come to be seen by many as the best of the Bond films, even more than half a century later. It was Connery's own favorite, as well as the favorite of Daniel Craig, the most recent actor to play Bond. The film was stylish, sexy, and exciting, all with tongue firmly in cheek, a formula that was repeated many times over the years but achieved a certain height in Others would argue that Connery's next outing as Bond was the best of all time. "Goldfinger" was the first Bond film to include the wide variety of gadgets that would become the spy's trademark, and critics and fans loved its glitzy style. The stage was set for "Thunderball" and "You Only Live Twice" to be massive hits, and they were, both smashing previous box office receipts. And then Connery bowed out.

Stepping away from the role

Connery, as he told it, never loved Bond. In fact, he told Playboy he was "fed up to here with the whole Bond bit" and the Guardian reported him as saying he had "always hated" Bond. The role had brought him fame, but it also wedged him into a tight, typecast box. Fleming had written a dozen Bond novels before his death, and as "You Only Live Twice" hit the big screen, Kingsley Amis (1922 - 1995) was taking over the character to write the first of what would become dozens more. The idea of playing Bond over and over forever must have begun to seem more like a sentence than a job.

So Connery walked, leaving Eon Productions to find someone else to play Bond in 1969's "On Her Majesty's Secret Service." The role went to George Lazenby, but he only wanted to do a single Bond picture. A few other actors were considered for "Diamonds Are Forever," but the men with the money wanted Connery, and they got him – though it took quite a bit of that money to entice him to return. But with "Diamonds" behind him, Connery was quite sure he was done with Bond. He'd never play him again, he said.

He had starred in other movies during his Bond years – perhaps most notable was Alfred Hitchcock's thriller "Marnie" (1964), and others included the critically acclaimed box office flop "The Hill" (1965) and the cult classic British Western film "Shalako" (1969), a concerted attempt to branch out from typecasting.

Notable roles of the '70s and '80s

Connery continued this effort throughout the '70s, taking on varied roles in films including "The Wind and the Lion" (1975), "The Man Who Would Be King" (1975), and "Robin and Marian," for which he received positive reviews playing a romantic lead opposite Audrey Hepburn. In "Murder on the Orient Express" (1974), he was the first actor to be cast, playing Col. Arbuthnot. He played an Army man again in "A Bridge Too Far" (1977) and a thief in "The Great Train Robbery" (1978).

Connery had continued to work throughout the '70s after his exit from the Bond franchise, but his greatest successes - and a return to his breakout role - were awaiting him in the 1980s. It started with "Outland" (1981), a space western that gained Connery his first nomination for a screen acting award. He didn't win the Saturn Award for Best Actor, losing to Harrison Ford for his work in the "Indiana Jones" franchise (which Connery himself would join a few years down the road), but greater recognition was yet to come.

In 1981, Connery appeared as Agamemnon in Terry Gilliam's fantasy classic "Time Bandits." His casting was prompted by a joke written into the screenplay by Michael Palin, who, it was revealed in the movie's DVD extras, jotted in the script at Agamemnon's first appearance: "The mask is pulled off at the end of the fight to reveal none other than Sean Connery - or at least an actor of equal but cheaper stature." Connery surprised the Monty Python cast members by being game for the role, and his '80s success continued. Next up: back to Bond.

Connery Learns Never to Say Never

Recall that Connery had vowed, after "Diamonds Are Forever," that he was absolutely, positively, done with Bond. He'd never play the role again, he said. But when work began on a retooling of "Thunderball," done outside of the Eon Productions Bond franchise that had Fleming's official blessing and had come to annoy Connery greatly over the years, he found his way to it. Initially he was helping tinker with a script, never intending to appear on the other side of the camera.

Then he was offered a paycheck with a lot of zeros and a percentage of the profits, and playing Bond at age 52 began to seem a lot more attractive. Connery took the role, and his wife, Micheline, offered a title suggestion, playing on his earlier vow. "Never Say Never Again" was a go.

To some, "Never Say Never Again" isn't part of the Bond cinematic canon, not coming from Eon Productions as most other Bond films have. But to others, the fact that it's got James Bond and Connery playing him, no less - makes it canon and a classic, and never mind the legal wrangling that went on behind the scenes.

Its non-Eon status meant that Connery went up against an "official" Bond film, "Octupussy," released just a few months earlier in 1983 and starring Roger Moore, who had succeeded Connery in the Bond role after "Diamonds." In a head-to-head match, Connery seemed to win out: "Never Say Never Again" had a bigger opening weekend than "Octopussy" and gained better reviews. Connery was, according to the Times, "still outclassing every other exponent of the role," and according to the Guardian, he was "the best Bond in the business."

It's an opinion that's still widely held. Of the six actors to play Bond, Connery is considered by most to be the best. As reviewer Roger Ebert put it, "The other Bonds were not wrong in the role (even Lazenby has his defenders), but they were not Connery, and that was their cross to bear." His status as the first big-screen Bond surely didn't hurt that reckoning, but the physical presence and animal magnetism that got him the role in the first place had a lot to do with it, too.

Bond became an international icon under Connery's watch. The novels had been popular in the UK but hadn't gained a lot of ground in the US. They were genre novels, but as films, they quickly caught broad attention outside the audience for spy adventure books. They couldn't have done it with a less perfect actor for the role, and Connery boosted the character's success as much as the franchise boosted his own career. By the time the American Film Institute created its "100 Years... 100 Heroes & Villains" list in 2003, Bond was such an indelible part of the cultural landscape that the character was named the third greatest movie hero of all time.

To the Oscars and Beyond

As popular as "Never Say Never Again" was, Connery's experience with it wasn't ideal. Its non-canon status may have seemed charmingly roguish to the general public, but to those involved, it was more like years of legal battles to get it to the big screen. Financial problems and infighting had plagued the production, and to top it off, Connery's wrist had been broken while filming. Fed up, he took a few years off from the movies. When he came back, it was with a bang.

First up for Connery in the post-post-Bond era was "Highlander" (1986) in which he played an Egyptian immortal with a Spanish name and his unmistakable Scottish accent entirely intact. Though it wasn't a huge success in theaters, the film has become a cult classic and one of the sillier highlights of Connery's career. Next, "The Name of the Rose" (1986), though not a huge hit, earned Connery his first major acting award, a BAFTA for Best Actor.

In 1987 came "The Untouchables," a generally well-received gangster movie that took Connery to the Academy Awards stage for the first and only time. He won the Oscar - it was his lone career nomination, too - for Best Supporting Actor. He also won the Golden Globe as well as the praise of critics. Hal Hinson, reviewing the film for the Washington Post, noted, "Connery has real brio and authenticity. ... He's playing an Irishman with a Scottish brogue, but it doesn't really matter. He steals the show." Ebert called Connery's "the best performance in the movie," while Pauline Kael called his performance "sheerly likable."

In 1989, Connery joined the "Indiana Jones" franchise for its third installment, "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," playing Indiana's father, Henry. He was nominated for Golden Globe and BAFTA awards, and he'd receive another BAFTA nomination the following year for "The Hunt for Red October," playing a Soviet submarine captain.

Later career

In the 1990s, Connery began producing films as well as acting in them. His career was slowing down, though, driven in part by his exasperation with the film industry. He told the BBC, "I'm fed up with the idiots... the ever-widening gap between people who know how to make movies and the people who green-light the movies." It was a view that led to his retirement in his 70s, an age when many actors are still looking for juicy roles.

Before he retired, Connery turned in a few more well-regarded performances, particularly in "Finding Forrester" (2000), playing a Salinger-esque reclusive writer. In 2003, he made his last film before retirement, "The League of Extraordinary Gentlemen," portraying hunter and adventurer Allan Quatermain

Connery officially confirmed his retirement in 2006 while receiving the American Film Institute's Lifetime Achievement Award. But having previously learned his lesson about saying never, Connery returned to provide the voice of the main character in the 2012 animated film "Sir Billi."

Connery in the News

With his first major public success coming as he played the notable rake Bond, Connery naturally gained his own reputation as a bit of a playboy. But he spent more time married – first to Diane Cilento (1932 - 2011) from 1962 to 1973 and then in 1975 to Micheline Roquebrune, who survives him - than he did playing the field. There were rumors of affairs, though Connery called Roquebrune his one

He was a sex symbol to be sure, never mind his marital status. In 1989, at age 59, he was named People magazine's "Sexiest Man Alive," the oldest ever to take that title. He was admired for more than his sex appeal, too, voted "Scotland's Greatest Living Treasure" in 2011 by the people of his home country, and named as the most appealing British actor via Q scores in 1998, 2003, and

But in a widely cited 1965 interview with Playboy magazine,

Connery came off more like a boor. "I don't think there is anything particularly wrong about hitting a woman," he told readers, "although I don't recommend doing it in the same way that you'd hit a man. An open-handed slap is justified, if all other alternatives fail and there has been plenty of warning. If a woman is a bitch, or hysterical, or bloody-minded continually, then I'd do it." And in Cilento's autobiography, she alleged that she left Connery after a physical fight in which he punched her in the face.

The Playboy comments were made during a more misogynistic era, perhaps nearly forgotten over the years as fans relished his performances. But Cilento's account, only made public in 2006 with the publication of her autobiography, was a new complexity that put a damper on some fans' love for the actor.

Connery's family announced that he will be honored with a private funeral. A public memorial event will be held at a later date.

Nikki McKibbin

Nikki McKibbin, a finalist in the 2002 debut season of "American Idol," placing third after Kelly Clarkson and runner-up Justin Guarini, died Nov. 1 of a brain aneurysm. She was 42.

McKibbin was one of the standout contestants in the popular first season of the singing competition reality show, focusing on her preferred style of rock 'n' roll. Her songs included "I Will Survive," "Total Eclipse of the Heart," and "Edge of Seventeen."

After coming in third, she received a record deal, but when she was urged to record a country album, she backed out. She later released her debut album, "Unleashed," in 2007.

McKibbin also appeared in reality shows including "Fear Factor," "Battle of the Network Reality Stars," and "Celebrity Rehab with Dr. Drew," successfully pursuing treatment for her cocaine and alcohol addiction.

In 2014, McKibbin's son competed in the 13th season of "American Idol."

"I've battled substance abuse and I'm winning, but it's still a struggle every day," she told People in 2019. "For a long time, I wasn't taking care of myself. I wasn't being the person I should be. I'm in a better place now.'

Herb Adderley

Herb Adderley, a Pro Football Hall of Fame cornerback who was a star of Vince Lombardi's Green Bay Packers in the 1960s and later played for the Dallas Cowboys, died Oct. 30 at age 81.

Adderley played college ball for Michigan State University as a halfback. Drafted by the Packers in the first round of the 1961 NFL draft, he was moved to cornerback by Lombardi in his rookie year to cover for an injured teammate.

Adderley shined in the position, helping the Packers to victory in his first game. He would go on to win Super Bowls I and II with the Packers, remaining with the team for nine seasons before being traded to the Cowboys in 1970.

He played three seasons there and helped the Cowbovs to an appearance in Super Bowl V and victory in Super Bowl IV.

Adderley was the only NFL player to play in four of the first six Super Bowls. He was a five-time Pro Bowler and was named to the NFL 1960s All-Decade Team.

In later years, Adderley was a broadcaster and coach at Temple University, and he owned a company that laid television cable lines.

"As far as I'm concerned, I never played for the Dallas Cowboys. I'm the only guy in the country who has a Dallas Cowboys Super Bowl ring and doesn't even wear it," Adderley wrote in his autobiography. "I'm a Green Bay Packer."

Luis Troyano

Luis Troyano, a runner-up on season five of the popular reality series "The Great British Baking Show," died of esophageal cancer at the age of 48. The date of Troyano's death was not revealed.

Troyano appeared on the show - known in the U.K. as "The Great British Bake-Off" - in 2014. An amateur chef like his fellow contestants, Troyano was named Star Baker during bread week, taking the title with his Roscón de Reyes.

His other creations for the show included a bakewell baked Alaska, blueberry cheesecake eclairs, and Indian rose baklava, and he was never among the bottom bakers throughout the season.

In the end, he was one of two runners-up to the winner, Nancy Birtwhistle.

The following year, Troyano published the cookbook "Bake it

Great." He was also a graphic designer. "My parents moved to the UK from Spain in the 1960s. Being

Do you need a home warranty?

When you purchase a home, even a home that isn't new, there is a very good chance that you will be offered a home warranty as a safety net against expensive, unforeseen repairs. It may sound like a great form of financial protection—but is it really the safety net that homeowners expect? Let's find out if home warranties are worth

What Is a Home Warranty?

A home warranty is not the same thing as homeowners insurance, which covers major perils such as fires, hail, property crimes, and certain types of water damage that could affect the entire structure and/ or the homeowner's personal possessions. A home warranty is a contract between a homeowner and a home warranty company that provides for discounted repair and replacement service on a home's major components, such as the furnace, HVAC, plumbing, and electrical systems. A home warranty may also cover major appliances, such as washers and dryers, refrigerators, and swimming

Often homeowners insurance doesn't cover these components. Or, the cost of fixing them (while expensive) wouldn't meet the policy's deductible—the dollar point at which insurance coverage kicks in.

Most plans have a basic component that provides all homeowners who purchase a policy with certain coverages. Homeowners can also purchase one or more optional components that provide additional coverage at additional Home warranty companies have agreements with approved service providers. When something that is covered by a home warranty breaks down, the homeowner calls the home warranty company, which sends one of its service providers to examine the problem. If the provider determines that the needed repair or replacement is covered by the warranty, they complete the work. The homeowner only pays a small service fee, plus the money already spent to purchase the warranty.

What Does a Home

A home warranty costs several hundred dollars a year, paid up front (or in installments, if the warranty company offers a payment plan). The plan's cost varies depending on the property type—single-family detached, condo, townhouse, or duplex—and whether the homeowner purchases a basic or an extended plan.

The cost usually does not vary with the property's age, unless the home is brand new, which increases the cost of coverage. The home's square footage also does not affect the price in most cases, unless the property is more than 5,000 square feet. Separate structures, such as guest houses, usually are not covered by the basic policy but can be covered for an additional fee. However, garages should be included as a standard feature of a warranty.

In addition to an annual premium, home warranties charge a service call fee (also called a trade call fee) of around $75 to $125 every time the warranty holder requests that a service provider come out to the house to examine a problem. If the problem requires more than one type of contractor to visit (e.g., a plumber and an electrician), the homeowner may have to pay the service fee for

Having a home warrantv doesn't mean the homeowner will never have to spend a penny on home repairs. Some problems won't be covered by the warranty, whether because the homeowner didn't purchase coverage for that item or because the warranty company doesn't offer coverage for that item. Also, home warranties usually don't cover components that haven't been properly maintained. (More about this drawback below.) Furthermore, if the warranty company denies a claim, the homeowner will still have to pay the service fee and will also be responsible for repair costs.

Cerritos approves new tract homes

CERRITOS - The Cerritos City Council has approved a proposal by Clarkdale Estates Homes, LLC to build a new residential tract of five single-family homes.

The development site, located at 17200 Clarkdale Avenue, is bordered on the south by Aclare Street and on the east by Juarez Elementary School.

property combines two existing vacant parcels and will be divided into five residential lots. Aclare Street will be permanently closed to accommodate the construction of a new 8-foot high perimeter wall along the east property line and one of the five residences.

The two-story homes will feature a gated courtyard at the front entrance to each residence and attached 1-car and 2-car garages. Each lot size is slated to be greater than 6,500 square feet and each home measures approximately 3,205 square feet.

The contemporary architecture will feature beigecolored stucco, dark brown trims, stone veneer, concrete wainscot, decorative garage doors, wall sconces and wrought iron gates.

The properties will also feature water-efficient landscaping and a variety of trees, shrubs and groundcover in the front yards.

Because the site is currently vacant and undeveloped, the developer will be required to install all underground utilities, including gas, electric, sewer, water and cable. The developer will also be responsible for constructing public sidewalks, parkways, curbs and related Warranty Cost?

doesn't have an emergency fund or wants to reserve it for other things, a home warranty can act as a buffer. Home warranties also make sense for people who aren't handy or don't want to worry about tracking down a contractor when they have a problem. Warranties can also make sense for people with expensive tastes in appliances.

The subject of home warranties often comes up during the sale and purchase of a home. A home warranty can provide reassurance to a home buyer who has limited information about how well the home's components have been maintained or—in the case of new construction—how well the home has been built. A warranty can also be helpful for people who have just depleted their savings to buy a home and want to avoid any additional major expenses.

For home sellers, offering the buyer a paid-up, oneyear home warranty with the purchase may provide a measure of protection against buyer complaints about any discovered problems or defects that arise after the sale closes. However, providing a home warranty does not exempt the seller from the legal requirement to disclose any known problems with the home.

The Drawbacks of Home Warranties

One major problem with a home warranty is that it will not cover items that have not been properly maintained. What is considered proper maintenance can be a significant gray area and is the source of many disagreements between home warranty companies and warranty holders. In a worstcase scenario, unscrupulous warranty companies may use the improper maintenance clause as an excuse to deny valid claims. In another scenario, the homeowner and the contractor who makes the house call may simply disagree over what constitutes proper maintenance.

Another common problem is that when a homeowner purchases a used home, it might come with a 10-yearold furnace that the previous owner did not maintain. At that point, no matter how well the new homeowner tries to care for the furnace going forward, the previous neglect can't be corrected and any damage can't be undone. In addition, warranties have numerous exclusions, as well as dollar limits per repair and per year.

Home warranties aren't expensive compared to the cost of repairing or replacing most of a home's important components, and this fact is one of a warranty's major selling points. However, there may be many years when nothing at all breaks down or wears out in the home. In these years the homeowner gets nothing (except, perhaps, peace of mind) in exchange for her premium. If that money had been put into an emergency fund, it would've earned some interest at least. Also, a homeowner who tries to use the warranty and has the claim denied will probably feel like the money spent on the premium and the service call fee was wasted.

Home warranties do eliminate the need to find a contractor when something breaks. However, they also eliminate the freedom to choose your own expert—an independent contractor—if you want the warranty to pay for the repair or replacement. If you don't like the contractor or the work that's done, you're stuck. Also, the homeowner may have little or no say in the model or brand of a replacement component, though the warranty contract should provide for an item of similar or equivalent quality.

Furthermore, the whole process may be more complicated when a third party (the home warranty company) is involved than if a homeowner is dealing directly with a contractor.

The Bottom Line

A home warranty is not a perfect solution to the risks and hidden costs homeowners face. If a seller wants to give you one, it won't hurt, certainly. Before you purchase one, though, read the fine print in the home warranty contract and carefully consider whether the warranty is likely to pay off.

Homeowners/buyers who would feel more comfortable having a home warranty—and home sellers who want to offer a warranty to a buyer—should also do careful research to find a reputable home warranty company that uses reputable contractors and will actually pay for legitimate repairs when they are needed.
