Norwalk baker Stephanie DeVoll competes on Food Network show

Stephanie DeVoll competes against other bakers on "Spring Baking Championship."

By Alex Dominuez Staff Writer

NORWALK - One local baker will take her talents to television next week, where she will compete for a $25,000 prize and a spot in Food Network Magazine.

Norwalk resident Stephanie DeVoll, 32, has been in the food industry for around 10 years, having graduated from Le Cordon Bleu in Pasadena in 2010 and interning at the Pelican Hill Resort in Newport Beach.

She eventually went on to do small baking jobs before eventually settling as a dessert business consultant.

That's when it hit her.

"I was helping other people start their businesses; if they had a question, I would help them and direct them to their dream," said DeVoll. "I ended up opening up a pie shop in Long Beach... and then I realized I was helping somebody else live their dream.

"That's when I met my business partner."

Newly inspired - and alongside her business partner Mandy Arburua – she created Downey based dessert catering business Whisk'd Away in 2017.

"We do anything big, all the way to small," said DeVoll. "If you have a little birthday party you wanted a birthday cake for, or a dessert display ... we always tell people, 'Come get whisked away' with us."

Using Instagram as their "sole way of advertising," DeVolle and Whisk'd away have been involved with several schools, events, and #### communities.

Eventually, it caught the attention of the Food Network, who offered DeVoll a chance to compete on the "Spring Baking Championship."

"They found us on Instagram and reached out and asked us if it was something we'd be interested in doing," said DeVoll. "I absolutely said yes, because nobody turns down the Food Network.

DeVoll describes her time on the show as "an absolutely amazing process.'

"I would do it again in a heartbeat; it was so much fun," said DeVoll.

That's not to say that the only heat DeVoll would feel would be from her oven.

"It was definitely stressful," said DeVoll. "You're at the highest of your highs and the lowest of your lows, or there's times where you think you're at the highest of your highs and you realize it's not what they want."

"They" being judges Kardea Brown, Nancy Fuller and Duff Goldman.

DeVoll says that meeting and baking for the judges was "surreal.

"Those are your peers; you want to be them. When I grow up, I want to be Duff," said DeVoll. "When you grow up vou want to be these people. You turn on TV, and shows like that - Duff Goldman's cake show, Kardea [on] Delicious Miss Brown - I watch those.'

"Especially when they give you your criticism... when they love something you're floating on air. When they don't love something, you're like 'Oh my god, I just gave them something bad."

DeVoll says she seemed to resonate well with Fuller the most.

"I love Nancy Fuller, she favorite," said DeVoll. "She is such a character; she is so funny. She has these quick, little witty comebacks. Her and Duff are always kind of bickering back and forth.'

On the flip side, Duff was the more of the "stickler."

"When the table is quiet, and everybody is waiting for Duff to say something, you are definitely holding your breath," said DeVoll. "Duff is the one that is going to say yay or nay."

"Especially when it comes to cake ... when you're making a cake for the cake guy, it's really intimidating. If he likes it, that's amazing. If he doesn't like it, oh lord."

other bakers from across the country

"They are all so incredibly talented," said DeVoll. "The intimidation factor was definitely there.'

"I consider myself to be a home-baker type, where we cater more to the community and not to the fancy five-star hotels. So, when I get in the same room as these people who have worked in these giant locations...it's really intimidating.'

While she can't give away any spoilers, DeVoll is happy with the ultimate results.

"I am absolutely satisfied with how it turned out," said

I'm so glad that I did it; that I said yes.

"I would have never in a million years done a show like this. Had they not reached out, I probably never would have tried to do a show like this. Never sell yourself short, because you can, you will, and that's the end-all, is that you can do anything you put your mind to. I think that was one of the big things I took away from this, that I can do anything."

Spring Baking Championship premieres with a two hour episode on Monday, Feb 22. at 9pm ET/PT on Food Network, and will also be available on Discovery+.

Eagles defeat rival APU twice in two nights; PacWest leader Point Loma up next.

By John M. Sherrard Contributor

LA MIRADA – With just two weeks remaining in the regular season, the Biola Men's Basketball team is on a major roll in the shortened PacWest schedule with a four-game winning streak.

The Eagles (5-2, 5-1), who are second behind PacWest Southern California "Pod" leader Point Loma (5-0, 4-0), won twice over rival Azusa Pacific last weekend, and twice over Concordia, Feb. 5, 6.

Biola defeated APU on Friday and Saturday.

The stage is set for the Eagles for this weekends' set of games beginning today (Feb. 19) at Chase Gymnasium and tomorrow (Feb. 20) at Point Loma. Both games begin at 4:30 pm.

The first set of games scheduled with Point Loma on Jan. 29, 30, was postponed due to conference COVID-19 protocols.

After Biola's 10-point, 81-71, win over APU on Friday, the Eagles won their second game in a row against the Cougars "At the end everything was with a go-ahead tip-in by junior huge," Elrod said. "You gotta forward Jesse Elrod (3-8 FG, 5 RB, 7 Pts.) with just .09 remaining.

In the storied history between the two rivals, APU still holds a 61-54 advantage all time.

How one university is moving forward from the pandemic

By Jim Malatras

My mind raced faster than I could scroll through Twitter or read the text messages. Photos of giant mask less parties. Concerned parent emails. Inquiries from the media.

It was the last Sunday in August, and I was in a car headed to Oneonta, New York-home to one of the State University of New York's 64 colleges and universities and soon-to-be-site of a COVID outbreak that would raise major questions about the viability of inperson learning on college campuses. Within hours, I would begin my new job as Chancellor of SUNY, my appointment coinciding with students' return to campuses

By mid-September, we had to shut down the campus. It was the right thing to do, but it wasn't the easy thing to do. We were happy to have students back and give them a little normalcy in this chaotic time, but this threw a wrench into that plan.

We needed a more comprehensive and cohesive plan of attack. I began crisscrossing the state to visit campuses and meet with students to get an on the ground read out from students, faculty, and staff.

These early visits—more than 30 over three months—would turn out to be transformative:

We quickly acted by establishing uniform policies requiring every campus regularly test students.

We reached agreements with our labor unions to regularly test faculty and staff.

We enacted strict compliance guidelines to stop the behavior that was driving the cause of the spread on campuses.

We provided unprecedented transparency with a public dashboard of what is happening on our campuses for parents, students, and the public to manage the crisis.

We also implemented a comprehensive mental health and wellness program to help ease the emotional stress of the social isolation, anxiety, and fear because of the pandemic.

and to modify course when emerging issues arose. As the largest system of higher education in the nation, we are like a giant ocean liner—and it can be difficult to quickly steer a change in course. But our faculty, students, staff, and brothers and sisters in labor came together and did what was needed. For instance, early in the summer, the health experts urged college campuses to alter their traditional schedules and have in-person instruction end around Thanksgiving as a way to limit spread. By mid-fall, experts warned that small home and other gatherings were driving the increased cases—and urged travel around olidays like Thanksgiving be limited. SUNY immediately adapted requiring and undertaking a massive testing out of more than 140,000 students heading home for the holiday break.

We had a positivity rate of about a half a percent—lower than every state with more than a half a million tests conducted in a few short months. Best yet, early data suggests that because of our work, and others, classrooms were not the vector of COVID spread.

Although there is hope because of the vaccine, challenges still lie ahead and that's why SUNY will continue to adapt to changing times. We can't let our guard down and therefore implemented a comprehensive spring reopening plan. As our students begin to come back, we're requiring every one of SUNY's 64 campuses to pretest students, faculty, and staff before the start of the semester, and require weekly testing of every student, faculty, and staff on campus moving forward.

We also made the decision early on to postpone the start of the semester until February 1st, when it was projected there would be a dramatic rise in cases after the holidays. And, we cancelled spring break, mandated masks at all times, even when socially distanced, and have taken extra care to reduce chances of spread on campus.

A roadmap to stay open is only good if you can implement it. That's where SUNY was a shining star. Our ability to test was made possible because of our innovative break throughs at SUNY Upstate Medical who invented the most accurate saliva test in the world. The

The most important component of our approach was to be nimble University at Albany researchers developed a similar saliva test. Our students were using 3D printers to produce PPE. Some were running a peer-to-peer hotline designed to help those suffering from loneliness and depression, while others were producing videos urging their classmates to "Mask Up or Pack Up".

> We realized that by harnessing our system's ingenuity and invention, fostering a culture of social responsibility and accountability, and creating a strict and uniform strategy for containing the virus, we could cross the finish line in the fall. And we did.

> Now, we begin our next race. As we approach the spring, higher education leaders have two options: either go fully remote or bring students back with rigorous measures. Colleges that are bringing students back will face COVID-19 cases. There's simply no way around it. As we learned, controlling that spread is a matter of preparedness, institutional will, and quick, data-driven decision making. What's a little different this time is many of our students are coming back to communities that have higher infection rates than where they are coming from, making our comprehensive policy even more important.

> And perhaps most importantly: the reopening challenge won't be a solo endeavor. We've seen that students have an extraordinary desire to learn in-person and a willingness to lead-not in the futurebut right now. If you create a culture of collective responsibility and accountability, they will rise to the challenge and deliver in unimaginable ways

> At the beginning of this semester, as I drove away from SUNY Oneonta last Sunday—as they reopen once again after a long-hard fought path back, I thought of our students and their resilience. Yes, this will still be a different college experience, but their leadership and the care of our faculty and staff, gives me hope.

Typewriters are not dead

By Froma Harrop

While cleaning out the garage of an elderly friend who died recently, what did I find under a pile of 1967 Playboys but a typewriter. It wasn't just any typewriter but a vintage IBM Selectric II. I moved all 37 pounds of it to the trunk of my car.

There's a scene in "Mad Men" where a new IBM Selectric arrives at the Sterling Cooper offices. It is 1960, and the staff gathers to gawk as it strikes letters via a wildly rotating ball — known as the "golf ball." The Selectric marked a revolutionary change from the traditional typewriter where individual type bars swing up to strike the ribbon and page. (Typewriter cultists complained that this Selectric model wasn't introduced until 1961.)

What did I need any typewriter for? Answer: Like many others Gorilla Glue'd to screens in service of social distancing, I hungered for things with moving parts, things you could touch, things not connected to Wi-Fi or other invisible technology. We don't absolutely need fountain pens either, but these writing instruments uniquely combine the tactile pleasures of writing by hand with the beauty of flowing ink.

Nostalgia for a more sensual pre-internet America must partly account for the presence of old TV shows on so many streaming lineups. My favorite is "Columbo," which first aired from 1971 to 1978. The rumpled detective pursues suspects in posh LA living rooms, with their touch-tone desk phones and bar carts already busy by mid-afternoon.

One tries to stymie Columbo's where-were-you question with the help of one of those old answering machines that had an internal tape player to record messages. Holding up the palm-sized tape reel, Columbo says to the weasel he's cornering: "You see this tape? This is tricky stuff.

My Selectric was grimy and the ribbon dried out. Happily, I found Mike Marr, a third-generation typewriter repairman, on Main Street in Pawtucket, Rhode Island. Marr Office Equipment is not your Apple tore Typewriters are the Marr family passion. Marr's grandfather would come home, go into the basement and fix typewriters until 10 or 11 at night. "My father would be upstairs in bed and hear the clacking," he said.

Do any offices still use them? I asked. Yes! Lawyers do, and undertakers still type out death certificates. Government offices slip certain forms into typewriters, certainly in an old-school state like Rhode Island.

"But a lot of people just enjoy typewriters in general," Marr said. Surprisingly, many are young students. They see the reporters in old movies banging on typewriters at places like the Chicago Tribune. The kids want to emulate it, and they love the sound," he said. "Their creative ability seems to flourish when they're typing on manual typewriters with the noise and such."

Marr's personal favorites? "I'm a little partial to the Olympia, a

Needless to say, Marr's invoice for the work on my Selectric was typed out. You could tell because some of the numbers landed in the middle of lines. Naturally, the bill he handed me was a carbon copy.

I'm typing this on a computer. PCs and Macs liberated humankind from the correction tape once needed to cover typos. And they enabled the electronic signature.

But an envelope with a typed address is something you'd notice, wouldn't you? And no one would have to wedge it into a printer to add

Trump's acquittal damages our democracy

By Steve Chapman

One of the most familiar lessons of the Donald Trump era is that no matter how bad today is, tomorrow can always be worse. We learned over and over that there is no bottom to his capacity for outrageous conduct, and there is no limit to his party's tolerance for it.

Jan. 6 was one of the greatest catastrophes in the history of the American republic. An incumbent president who had decisively lost his reelection roused his deranged disciples to launch a massive attack on the U.S. Capitol in an effort to keep him in office. It was an attempted coup, nothing less. Lives were lost; members of Congress and their aides were traumatized; and the president who instigated the attack took pleasure in it.

But Saturday's Senate vote to acquit Trump in his impeachment trial was worse. Forty-three duly elected representatives of the people of their states chose to ignore or rationalize his shocking blitzkrieg. They repudiated their sworn duty to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.'

No American president has been so openly contemptuous of the constraints of the Constitution as Trump. He decided long ago to treat any defeat at the polls as the result of fraud, regardless of the reality. If the democratic processes of our system did not give him what he wanted, he would wage war on them. And he did — starting months before Americans went to the polls and continuing for months afterward.

Any elected government can be hijacked by a skilled and ruthless demagogue. But in the design of our system, Congress is supposed to serve as a counterweight to the president, jealous of its prerogatives and independent of the executive branch. The impeachment power is the ultimate check, allowing legislators to remove any president who abuses his office.

But the impeachment power now has about as much importance as the Third Amendment — which forbids quartering of soldiers in private homes during peacetime. Trump's second acquittal leaves no doubt that for most Republican members of Congress, party comes before country, now and forever.

The framers feared the emergence of political parties and thought the framework they erected would prevent it. In his farewell address, President George Washington declared, "The common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it."

Disagreements over religion, government and other matters, wrote James Madison in The Federalist, has often "divided mankind into parties, inflamed them with mutual animosity, and rendered them much more disposed to vex and oppress each other than to cooperate for their common good." A better explanation of Trump's acquittal

Remembering Dr. Stauffer

Dear Editor:

I had the privilege of knowing Dr. Mary Stauffer through my membership in the Rotary Club of Downey and by observing her activities on behalf of the Stauffer Foundation. (Disclosure: both of my children were Stauffer's Scholars and Junior 4.0 GPA merit awards recipients and received monetary rewards from the Stauffer Foundation.)

Dr. Stauffer's philanthropy is legendary and paraphrasing Winston Churchill, never have so many owed so much to one person. Her philanthropic work is well known in Downey.

The thing that sticks out more in my mind is Mary's vitality. One time we went together to a Rotary District breakfast meeting in Inglewood. We parked on the fourth floor. At the end of the meeting, there were many people on the first floor waiting to get in the elevator. Seeing this, she said, "Let's not wait and take the stairs." We climbed four floors and at the end she was just as fresh as when would be hard to find.

Congressional Republicans, with a handful of noble exceptions, are more than willing to excuse the inexcusable if it comes from a president who shares their partisan affiliation. Maybe they are afraid of the political consequences they would face for breaking with Trump. Maybe they think what he did to advance the GOP agenda — tax cuts, deregulation, conservative judges — is bigger than what he did to sabotage constitutional government.

Maybe some even relish the idea of right-wing extremists terrorizing elected officials to advance Republican policies. Whatever the motive, the damage is deep and possibly irreparable.

The danger produced by this dismal outcome is not so much that Trump will run again in 2024. Chances are good that by then, he will be indicted and convicted for at least one felony, whether for tax evasion, campaign finance violations, solicitation of election fraud or other crimes. He would have trouble running for president from a correctional institution. Likewise if he decides to flee to a country that has no extradition treaty with the U.S.

The real significance of the Senate's refusal to convict Trump is that it normalizes behavior that once would have been anathema to either political party. It assures his followers that he did nothing wrong. It eats away at the foundation of our form of government. It invites a future Republican president — shrewder and more disciplined than Trump — to install himself permanently in the White House.

It may sound impossible in a republic as long-lasting and resilient as ours. But since Jan. 6, a lot of things that seemed impossible have come to pass. And they have inflicted a wound on our democracy that may never heal.

Another time, Warren High students were being featured in a TV program that was taped at 6 am. Much to my surprise, I saw Mary arrive at the Columbia Memorial Space Center where the show was being taped to show her support for the students. She had been at a meeting the prior night until 10 pm.

I witnessed her attendance at robotics competitions and at many activities that promoted and recognized students' accomplishments.

I regret that the Covid-19 protocols kept me from visiting her last year at her retirement home.

She was a strong influence in my life and my children's. She will be sorely missed.

Does the pandemic have you feeling like your career is stuck in the middle seat?

• Learn in your 20s, lead in your 30s, and start a business in your 40s aybe you weren't an entrepreneurial wunderkind, one of those young prodigies who could launch a multi-million-dollar enterprise in between final exams.

Instead, you dedicated yourself to working for someone else, moving up in the organization as you honed leadership skills and business acumen.

That more methodical approach may be about to pay off if you have reached the midpoint of your career and, finally, feel ready to start your own business, says Stephen E. Gerard (www.stephenegerard.

com), an entrepreneur and the ForbesBooks author of "Stuck in the Middle Seat: The Five Phases to Becoming a Midcareer Entrepreneur.<sup>7</sup>

"That time in the corporate world gives you the opportunity to build on your knowledge and abilities," says Gerard, who started his first company when he was in his 40s.

"I like to say that you learn in your 20s, you lead in your 30s, and in your 40s you can leverage all that to start your own business."

Different factors may cause you to consider branching out on your own. Maybe your company downsized, leaving you jobless. Perhaps the midcareer doldrums set in and you need to feel energized again, or you have stumbled into your big idea.

Regardless, once you decide more quickly." to start a business, a question arises: How do you determine what that business should be?

Gerard has a few tips for how to settle on a business idea and make it succeed:

Figure out what it is you love to do. You could launch a business based on what's trendy or where the most money seems to be. But Gerard recommends the business connect to something you love doing.

"Reflect on what gets you excited and think about how that could be turned into a business," he says. "Is there an activity you get so caught up in that you lose track of time? What's an example of something you do that you would get angry if someone interrupted you while you were doing it?" As you play with such thoughts, what you love to do and potential ideas for your business will emerge.

Refine the idea. After you settle on your idea and begin working out the details, you may be tempted to try to be everything to everybody, Gerard says. Bad approach.

"If the idea is too broad or too vague, you run the risk of having no differentiated appeal," he says. "The more you narrow and crystallize your business's focus, the more you will actually broaden your appeal. By being very sharp about what your business does and does not do, you'll succeed

So, whittle away at your idea. Adjust and tweak it so that potential customers and clients will be clear about what you offer and how you differ from competitors.

Be precise in describing your business. How would you explain to others, quickly and simply, what your business does

Too often, businesses develop "about us" descriptions filled with jargon and fuzzy language. The more precise and direct you are, the better.

"Look for three or four key words that describe your business, and then link them together," Gerard says. "Be clear in your own mind what your business is and what it is not."

Develop an elevator pitch, a quick summary about your business that could be stated in the brief time it takes to go up or down a few floors.

"If you have trouble doing this, you're probably too close to it and overcomplicating it," he says. "That's natural, so ask for help, either from a professional consultant or a colleague."

Be ready to adapt. Times will change, the market will change, and customer habits will change. That means the original idea for your business could need an adjustment at some point. "When necessary,
