Norwalk could face vaccine shortage

■ The state's protocol for vaccine distribution could leave Norwalk vulnerable, a new study suggests.

NORWALK - Norwalk By Eric Pierce faces a vaccine shortage under the state's new distribution protocols, according to a report released Tuesday by Cogitativo, a data science company.

The report, "Underserved and Overlooked: Severe Vaccine Shortages In LA County's Hardest-Hit Communities," compares the new vaccine distribution strategy announced by state officials – which will set aside 40 percent of vaccine doses for disadvantaged communities in the lowest quartile of the Healthy Places Index (HPI) with a more precise distribution model developed by Cogitativo that precisely quantifies risk down to the city level based on real clinical data and social determinants of health (SDOH), as well as peer-reviewed medical literature on Covid-19 and other Assuming an available supply of 6 million doses to demonstrate shortages that could take place over the next several months, the report simulates both approaches for L.A. County.

Poet and essayist Cathy Park Hong fearlessly and provocatively blends memoir, cultural criticism, and history to expose fresh truths about racialized consciousness in America.

With sly humor and a poet's searching mind, Hong uses her own story as a portal into a deeper examination of racial consciousness in America today. This intimate and devastating book traces her relationship to the English language, to shame and depression, to poetry and female friendship. A radically honest work of art, Minor Feelings forms a portrait of one Asian American psyche—and of a writer's search to both uncover and speak the

Biden needs to get tough on immigration

By Froma Harrop

Undocumented immigrants have been surging to the U.S. border, used the bull argument that farmers don't have computers. Turning some wearing T-shirts with the Biden campaign logo and the words "Please let us in!" What gave them the idea that they could just show up and come on in? President Joe Biden did.

Oh, Biden didn't exactly say that. He said to not come now, as we rebuild the immigration system. But that isn't the same as saying they can't come illegally later. And since it implies that later on, whoever wants to come can, the migrants can reasonably assume that an arrival now without papers will eventually be overlooked.

Adding to that impression, Biden made a show on his first day in office of ditching five of the Trump administration's immigration policies. Sure enough, human smugglers began telling desperate border wall. Central Americans that Biden opened the door and the smugglers will get them through it for $6,000.

What did Biden think would happen? Officials at U.S. Customs and Border Protection warned the incoming administration of building pressure at the southern border. Fed by worsening poverty and gang violence in Central America and an improving U.S. economy, the rush had already begun in Donald Trump's last months.

It took until this weekend for Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas to firmly say the border of the United States "is closed." Roberta Jacobson, White House coordinator for the southern border, got still more specific. "The message isn't 'Don't come now,'" she said. "It's 'Don't come in this way, ever.'"

The earlier sloppy rhetoric handed Republicans a political bomb they are throwing at Democrats. Not that they've entirely earned the right. Trump's card trick was to hurl insults at undocumented immigrants while looking the other way when American businesses employed them as low-cost labor.

When Trump was asked whether he supported a national requirement to use E-Verify — a database that would confirm a new hire's right to work in this country — he said no. Asked why not, he politics, economics and culture.

off the job magnet is the only way to cut the flow of illegal workers.

That is also missing from Biden's proposal for comprehensive immigration reform. He would confer legal status to most of the estimated 11 million undocumented immigrants. He would offer $4 billion in aid aimed at making life in some Central American countries less terrible. And he would reform the U.S. refugee and asylum systems. All good things.

But a plan that doesn't seriously stop Americans from employing people who entered illegally or overstayed their visas is not going to secure the border. Not any more than Trump's dramatics over a Politicians of both parties should know where the public stands on these matters. A Gallup poll last summer found that for the first time, Americans want more, not less, immigration. Also, nearly 8 in 10 Americans think immigration is good for the country, with some Republicans in agreement.

In a 2019 poll, 65 percent thought the situation at the border to be a major or important problem. And 75 percent favored hiring significantly more Border Patrol agents.

What we see is that Americans support a large immigration program but want it kept legal. Canada and Australia do both. How sensible of them.

An experienced politician who wants to retain public support for humane immigration program should know by now that an orderly border is essential — and that given the pressures, any show of laxness is a guarantee of disorder. On this issue, Biden can't be a nice guy without also being a tough guy.

He needs to show resolve and show it now.

You can blame Trump for the border crisis

By Steve Chapman

In 2014, the Obama administration was faced with a surge in remainder of Trump's presidency. From May to October, the number unaccompanied minors from Central America showing up at our border and seeking asylum. In an effort to reduce the number of kids trekking across Mexico, it created a program to let them apply for asylum in their home countries. Some 13,000 did, helping to ease the president and acted on his twin beliefs: anything that Barack Obama did was bad, and anything that helped foreigners was worse. He killed the program, and soon the number of Central American kids crossing over began to grow. By the spring of 2019, his administration was faced with its very own crisis at the border.

His Department of Homeland Security responded with harsh measures — separating children from parents in large numbers, expelling children from Central America into Mexico and forcing asylum seekers to remain for months in Mexico in squalid camps.

Today, we see another tide of Central Americans coming north, and Republicans blame President Joe Biden for enticing them. They refer to it as "Biden's border crisis," as though it suddenly exploded

In fact, it emerged when the White House was just a gleam in Biden's eye. The increase began last spring and built steadily over the and Border Patrol nearly tripled. In truth, it was dire conditions in their home countries that drove the migrants. Republicans claim they were emboldened by Biden's plan to stop work on Trump's border wall — the one Mexico was supposed to pay for. That theory is implausible, because Trump added only 47 miles of You can guess what happened next. Donald Trump became barriers in places that didn't have them before.

> 'Only a few miles were built in South Texas, the area most prone to illegal crossings," The New York Times recently reported. "Instead, much of the construction, especially in the Trump administration's closing days, has taken place in remote parts of Arizona where crossings in recent years have been relatively uncommon.'

> of "southwest land border encounters" recorded by U.S. Customs

If Biden deserves any responsibility for the recent surge, it's not because of what he did wrong but because of what he did right. Trump's fondness for systematic cruelty may have discouraged some Central Americans. But the cruelty was impossible to justify, even for an ostensibly good purpose.

Under Trump's zero tolerance policy, thousands of children were taken from their parents when the families crossed the border to exercise their right to seek political asylum. Most of the parents were sent back to their home countries. Some of the kids spent weeks sleeping on the floor in chain-link cages. Last fall, we learned the horrifying truth that the Trump administration had lost track of the parents of 545 children, making it impossible to reunite the families.

The brutality was a design feature. Trump's White House Chief of Staff John Kelly boasted that "a big name of the game is deterrence." But sometimes deterrence asks too much.

There are alternative remedies, such as letting more foreigners in through authorized channels. But Trump was against immigration of any sort. His administration virtually eliminated admissions for refugees, and last year, it slashed the number of green cards for legal permanent residents.

Today, the worldwide backlog of applications for green cards is at 5 million. Many recipients have to wait 10 years or more to be admitted. Cato Institute analysts David Bier and Alex Nowrasteh reach this startling conclusion: "At no time in American history has immigration been as legally restricted as it is currently.'

For the moment, the Biden administration has the task of coping with the border crisis while dismantling the inhumane practices of its predecessor. In the longer term, it could relieve pressure on the border by increasing refugee admissions and allotting more slots to the Central American countries that have produced so many migrants.

It could create a program for guest workers from Mexico and Central America, as proposed by Mexican President Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador. Biden has already moved to restore the Central American Minors Program to provide "a safe, legal, and orderly alternative to the risks incurred in the attempt to migrate to the United States irregularly.

Giving people an avenue to come here legally in order to keep them from coming illegally? A crazy idea, but it just might work.

Vaccination is key to getting the U.S. back on track

By Carlos del Rio, M.D.

The end of the pandemic in the U.S. is in sight. The Covid-19 vaccines currently available in the United States have proven to be outstandingly effective at protecting recipients from coronavirus and

These vaccines -- and the potential of others on the way -- have the power to lift us out of the depths of this pandemic and put us on the path forward to rebuilding from Covid-19's devastating economic, social, and psychological impacts.

Put simply, getting America vaccinated is our ticket to halting the death toll and significantly slowing the spread of the virus. The vaccines are our ticket forward -- this is the message that needs to be shouted from the roof tops right now.

While public confidence in the vaccines, and access to them, continues to grow, many Americans -- especially Black and Hispanic adults and those living in rural areas -- remain hesitant about getting

In redoubling efforts to dispel fears about Covid-19 vaccines, the message that needs to be conveyed across the board is that these breakthroughs will not only stamp out the virus, but also end much of the growing collateral damage due to the pandemic.

We know that these are very safe vaccines. Out of the first 1.9 million Pfizer vaccine recipients, only 21 people experienced severe reactions. That's 0.00001 percent.

We also know that the vaccines have demonstrated successful results. In a Moderna trial of 30,000 volunteers, half received the vaccine and the other half a placebo. In the placebo group, 185 came down with Covid-19, whereas in the vaccinated group, only 11 did, and all those cases were mild. That translates into an efficacy rate of

Even more importantly, the data shows that the Moderna vaccine is 100 percent effective in preventing severe Covid-19 infections. The data from Pfizer and Johnson & Johnson is remarkably similar.

Skeptics say the vaccines were developed too quickly to be effective, that they'll cause worse side effects than the coronavirus itself, or that they won't prevent person-to-person spread.

The medical community knows that the first two of those statements are wrong, and the third, while very unlikely, has also been proven wrong in clinical trials where even when the virus was contracted the cases were notably mild.

Underselling the vaccine and fostering skepticism has very real consequences -- especially for the vulnerable communities who have already been most hard hit.

Even before Covid-19, our health care system was fraught with millions across America living with one or more chronic conditions. People with chronic illnesses are six times more likely to be hospitalized and 12 times more likely to die from Covid-19 than people with no chronic conditions.

We also know that this pandemic disproportionately impacts persons of color. According to the CDC, Black and Hispanic people are about four times more likely to be hospitalized and almost three times more likely to die from Covid-19 than whites.

With awareness of these impacts must also come awareness of the path forward that the available vaccines provide us. This awareness is simple: Get vaccinated as soon as you are eligible.

Soft on crime

Dear Editor:

One of our elected county officials has come up with a novel approach to reduce crime -- just make it disappear. George Gascon is the new Los Angeles County District Attorney. Since he took office, he has made many policy changes to the criminal justice system. Some good and some bad. The bad ones disturb me. For example, his new policies eliminate the three-strikes law, sentence enhancements and gang enhancements. They also call for the elimination of many misdemeanors including public intoxication, criminal threats and resisting arrest. His policies also eliminate cash bail for certain misdemeanors.

We all should beware of the probability of more crime in our area.

Downey

Mosquito awareness

I want to help people get rid of mosquitoes. Mosquitoes spread sicknesses that can kill you, like malaria, yellow fever, and West Nile virus. If you are in Los Angeles, be careful because the West Nile virus has been spotted there.

I learned in school that you need to get rid of all standing water. If you have a bird bath, replace the water every week. Use mosquito repellent when you go outside to keep mosquitoes away when you play. I hope mosquitoes disappear so we can have a better life.

Government dysfunction

Dear Editor:

The United States government is totally dysfunctional.

Voting is totally partisan and therefore nothing is accomplished. I liken it to a fish tank aquarium: if you do not supply it with fresh water, the fishes will die. We need term limits on our representatives, not career politicians who, like President Biden, have been living on taxpayers' money for over 50 years.

Without new and fresh ideas that term limits would provide, the government will die which is what has happened in the United States.

Food allergies are on the rise. Children are more likely than ever before to suffer from them. This increase has been most evident in industrialized countries. Currently, they affect over 10% of children in the United States, as well as some 7% of children in the United Kingdom, 9% in Australia, and (strangely) about 2% in

What is an allergic reaction? Allergens, which are normally harmless substances in the environment, trigger the immune system. Allergic reactions include skin rashes, hives, swelling, vomiting, diarrhea, and most seriously, difficulty breathing and anaphy-

The most common allergy causing foods in children include milk, eggs, peanuts, tree nuts (walnuts, almonds, pine nuts, brazil nuts, and pecans), sesame, fish, and shellfish.

Could the increases in those with allergies, and differences among countries, actually be due to disparities in reporting and increasing awareness? Scientists think this is not the case, and that the current level of increased sensitivity to foods is likely some combination of the effects of our Western lifestyle with various environmental factors. The rates of allergies are much lower in developing countries, and occur in urban rather than rural areas. Theories abound to explain this. They include:

· The impact of pollution. · The effects of dietary changes.

· When exposure to microbes is reduced, our immune systems actually respond more strongly to exposure. Ironically, most of the world's populations now have less exposure to microbes due to cleanliness and improved hygiene.

· Vitamin D helps our immune system to develop healthy responses, and makes us less susceptible to allergies. However, most people don't get enough sumed. Blood tests can identify most common food allergens, but aren't conclusive. A supervised oral food challenge is still the most definitive test to confirm a diagnosis.

There is no cure, but some find improvement through allergen immunotherapy. This involves introducing small amounts of the offending allergen, which gradually reduces sensitivity.

Are childhood food allergies permanent? Allergies to milk, eggs, wheat and soy sometimes disappear over time, while allergies to peanuts, tree nuts, fish and shellfish tend to be lifelong. Those with food allergies learn to be extra careful when dining in restaurants, as waiters may not always know the ingredients of every dish on the menu. Depending on the level of sensitivity, simply walking into a kitchen or a restaurant can trigger an allergic reaction.

It is unfortunate that food allergies remain a source of worry and concern for children and their families. However, the future of preventing or minimizing food allergies in children looks promising. Researchers are investigating the use of probiotics to change the microbiota (bacteria in the intestines), and a host of oral immunologic therapies are being investigated to help desensitize children. Stay tuned.

Whittier students take top honors at academic decathlon

■ Whittier High and Santa Fe High students are impressive in L.A. County's academic decathlon, held virtually this year.

The Cardinals narrowly edged out District rival Santa Fe High School, which took second place in Division III in only its second year of competition.

"AcaDec required a lot of independent will as well as support from the entire team, but we were able to persevere, Curfman said. "The Cold War theme was very appealing and kept me motivated to focus on a variety of subjects which medaled in. Overall, the > Whittier's and Santa Fe's strong showing in the 2021 competition reflects students' and coaches' determination to succeed, rising to the challenges of studying independently and staying focused during a year of remote learning and social distancing.

"This year's decathlon was definitely different. It was strange having all the events online, especially speech and interview," Whittier Ĥigh junior Sophia Rodriguez said. "But it was still an incredible experience that I'm fortunate enough to have been a part of."

Whittier High was awarded 27 medals, with Curfman and Santa Fe, led by junior Tania Padilla and junior Germain Becerra, scored 21 medals, and were named LACOE's 2021 Most Improved Team. Santa Fe also took third place in Super Quiz, earning bronze medals for each team member.
