Roybal-Allard retiring from Congress

■ Long Beach mayor Robert Garcia is considered a frontrunner to replace her in a newly-drawn district.

DOWNEY - Rep. Lucille Roybal-Allard of Downey, the first Mexican-American woman elected to Congress, announced Monday she will not run for reelection in 2022.

"Serving my constituents in Congress has been the single most distinguished honor of my life," the 80-year-old Roybal-Allard, a Democrat, said in a statement.

"Over my many years of public service, I have always strived to do that which is best to help improve my community and my country. After 30 years in the House of Representatives, the time has come for me to spend more time with my family. Therefore, I have decided not to seek reelection."

Roybal-Allard's Congressional District includes Bell, Bell Gardens, Commerce, Cudahy, Downey, Huntington Park, Maywood, Paramount, Vernon and portions of Bellflower, East Los Angeles, Florence-Firestone and South Los Angeles.

She was the first Latina to serve on the House Appropriations Committee and to chair an Appropriations Subcommittee.

Long Beach Mayor Robert Garcia praised the veteran representative's work.

"Congresswoman Roybal-Allard is a trailblazer and has been a fearless advocate for Los Angeles and the Southeast cities," Garcia said. "She has been an incredible national tremendously grateful for her leadership and service to our country and our community."

Garcia announced last week that he would run for Congress in 2022, though new districts have yet to be finalized.

specific plans for the future, but said she would continue to support her district, which includes South and East Los Angeles.

"While I will not be seeking re-election in 2022, I look forward to continue to work for the people of my district in the new year and long after I leave public office," she said.

She did not mention redistricting as a factor in her decision, though she told the Los Angeles Times in November that she had concerns the new maps would dilute the power of Latino voters she currently represents.

"I am aware of the current draft map and I have concerns about the protections of Voting Rights [Act] districts and in particular the diluting of the vote in our Latino communities," she said, while urging the commission to address those issues before finalizing the districts.

Roybal-Allard was one of three House Democrats to announce Monday they would not run again, bringing the total number of retirements before the midterm elections to 23, according to the Washington

Rick Ramirez selected Norwalk mayor

■ The City Council veteran takes the reins from Jennifer Perez; Ana Valencia was chosen vice mayor.

By Vincent Medina Contributor

NORWALK – During the city council reorganization meeting Tuesday evening, Rick Ramirez succeeded Jennifer Perez to become the new Norwalk mayor.

The council unanimously voted for Ramirez to assume the role after the then-vice mayor Tony Ayala nominated him, and Perez seconded the motion.

"I'm humbled and I'm thankful for former-vice mayor Tony Ayala for the nomination and the support of the city council. As a team player, I will continue to work together for the betterment of Norwalk," said Ramirez. "It's going to be a challenging year, I'm sure not as challenging as the former mayor served. There is a lot of uncertainty, a lot of unknown, and a lot of good friends who pass along the way, but we will continue to fight for them and move forward."

The new mayor quickly nominated his vice mayor Ana Valencia, who joined the meeting through zoom after testing positive for COVID-19.

Paging Dr. Frischer...

By Dr. Alan Frischer

Here we go again. Just as the COVID pandemic numbers were looking manageable and our country was beginning to reopen, along comes Omicron. What does this mean? Just how bad is it?

I must mention that just last Saturday, my wife and I planned to take my mother to the Ahmanson Theater for the first time since the March 2020 shutdown. That very morning, the show was canceled, along with the rest of the run. Why? The cast and crew experienced a major COVID outbreak. The Rams football game was postponed due to players with COVID. The UCLA basketball game was delayed due to COVID. Many other events, including Broadway shows, the Radio City Music Hall Rockettes, and numerous sporting events have been canceled or delayed as well.

Note that the situation is changing so rapidly that all that is certain is that by the time this column goes to press, the picture will surely look different. Still, here are some ominous numbers:

· New York City reported 21,027 cases on December 16, the highest single day count of COVID-19 cases since the start of the pandemic. Feel free to reread that last sentence. Cases in New York doubled in a four-day period.

· There have been over 65,000 newly confirmed cases in London in the past seven days, with more than 26,000 cases reported in the last 24-hour period alone. Like New York City, this is the highest single day count since the start of the pandemic. The number of COVID patients in London hospitals rose by 29%.

· Paris will not have its traditional fireworks display over the Champs-Elysees due to this surge. All large outdoor events and gatherings will be banned on New Year's Eve as France faces its fifth wave.

· Locally, COVID hospitalizations in Los Angeles County continue to rise, due to this winter surge and a post-Thanksgiving uptick in infections, prompting California to impose a statewide indoor mask-wearing mandate.

Now, on to Omicron. This variant has been found in 89 countries as of December 16. The World Health Organization (WHO) informs us that Omicron cases in those countries are doubling every 1.5 to three days, and that Omicron spreads much faster than the Delta variant due to its large number of mutations. Moreover, Omicron is even spreading in countries where the vaccination rate is very high. In the United States, in just one week, the Omicron variant went from 3% of cases to 73% of all new COVID cases.

How effective are our current vaccines against Omicron? Preliminary data from England shows that two doses of the Pfizer or Moderna vaccines are not nearly as effective against Omicron as they are against Delta. However, it appears that for those who have had the booster, protection is far better. This makes the booster shot even more important.

Our biggest hope is that Omicron does not cause as serious an illness as does Delta. Early data indicates that this may be the case, but much more information on hospitalization and death rates is needed. Regardless, Omicron will tax our workforce (health care workers in particular), fill up hospital beds, and cause yet more damage to the economy.

The numbers are serious. We were already heading into a winter surge, and on top of that we now have a far more transmissible variant. You have heard this before: The best defenses are to become vaccinated, get the booster, wear a mask, and despite winter weather, socialize outdoors. Virus mutations do not care that, after these many months, we are all suffering from pandemic fatigue. Please do your best to stay healthy, and be on the lookout for more information from the CDC and the WHO.

Short story: Santa Pig

By Yolanda Adele Contributor

In the mid 80s when our youngest daughter, Tina, was in high school, she presented me with an ornament for our Christmas tree. She made it from cotton batting she stuffed into a nylon stocking. When she stitched the eyes, nose, and mouth it looked like a pig. Atop its head was a red Santa cap.

I knew immediately that ornament was going to the back of the Christmas tree. A pigged-faced Santa was not an appropriate image to hang on the tree, which I so meticulously adorned with lovely and carefully placed Victorian decorations.

Without any comment I camouflaged the pig by setting it deep within the back of tree branches, thinking that Tina would not take notice. The next morning when I walked past the Christmas tree, there was the pig face staring at me from a prominent place on the front of the tree next to a delicate gilded angel and a white/silver

I screeched to a halt. "No! No! I do not want it there," I screamed in silence. Still, year after year the war of the pig placement continued.

When Tina graduated from high school, married and left our home, I thought of a plan to rid myself of that Santa Pig. On her first married Christmas, I adorned her Christmas gift with the Santa Pig face in lieu of a bow and I placed it in her house under her Christmas tree, under her roof. "There," I thought to myself, "I'm done with that hideous Santa pig face."

And so I was . . . until the following year when Tina came over Christmas Eve and placed a beautifully red foil paper wrapped gift for me under our tree. Atop the box was an exquisite bow with the hideous pig-faced Santa. I was stunned to see it.

From that day on I knew Tina and I would not see the last of that pig until one of us was gone forever.

One year I lost track of who had it last after all the Christmas decorations were put away. When it occurred to me that I may have thrown it out with the Christmas trash, a surprising thing happened.

I panicked. I wanted that ugly Santa Pig! Why? I asked myself.

I ransacked every box and bag in our Christmas storage shed until it looked like a tornado had gone through. As I continued to search, the answer to my question became clear. I couldn't bear to lose something that had started a tradition between my daughter and me.

I discovered that Santa Pig had the power to hold Christmas memories for us to be dispersed year after year. That realization is what gave value to the Santa-faced pig.

My search took three days until at last I spotted the pointed red cap sticking out of a box. I held my breath and gently lifted the cap until Santa Pig's face was in full view. There it was! That Pig Face Santa never looked more handsome.

For decades Santa Pig has made its pilgrimage to and from our house to hers. Now the grandchildren are in on the tradition. They have added their own handmade Santa Piggy to the original and have fun concocting how they are going to present it to me every other year when it's their turn. And of course, I begin to strategize how to surprise them as well.

I'm grateful for this simple, old fashion, no apps, tradition we brought into the new millennium.

Manchin gave Democrats a chance to save their agenda

Senator Joe Manchin of West Virginia seemingly dealt a terrible setback to President Biden's agenda on Sunday, when he told Bret Baier of Fox News that he could not support the version of the Build Back Better Act passed by the House last month. Although Democrats were rightfully frustrated by the way in which Mr. Manchin expressed his concerns, he was raising a valid critique: This bill was deeply flawed, and the "compromises" his colleagues made did nothing to address the concerns he has been consistently raising since this summer.

Other Democrats may not realize it, but Mr. Manchin may well have given them a gift. They should've gone back to the drawing board months ago, when it first became clear that their budgetary gimmickry was turning the bill into a confusing mess. Now, they will have to — and if they revise the bill to cut the number of programs they propose while making the ones they do propose permanent and easier for Americans to navigate, it could deliver Democrats both lasting policy change and the political victory they so desperately need.

Democrats had been trimming the bill for months in an effort to meet Mr. Manchin's demand that it cost less than $2 trillion over the next decade. But rather than focusing on a few top priorities, they wedged almost every major social program Mr. Biden had proposed into the bill and relied on arbitrary expiration dates to make it seem less expensive. As a result, according to the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, these programs would cost more than $4.7 trillion if made permanent, as every supporter of the bill clearly intends them to be.

This structure sets Democrats up for failure. Extending these programs without adding to the national debt would likely require raising taxes by an additional $3 trillion over the next decade, which would be extremely difficult to do, particularly after Democrats incorporate all of the tax increases they could get consensus for into the Build Back Better Act. If Democrats cannot agree on how to continue paying for their major social programs, the only alternative — besides breaking their promise not to add to the deficit — would be to allow those programs to expire after a few short years.

dollars in benefits they would have gotten if they had had children only a few years earlier, many families may never receive these benefits in the first place. Many programs in the Build Back Better Act require state and local governments to implement them, and local officials in both parties have already said they may not commit resources to programs for which federal support may vanish just a couple years after being created.

Unlike those on the left now unleashing their righteous wrath on Mr. Manchin, I have long sympathized with his objections to this approach, as well as his concerns about inflation and the unsustainable growth of

But I believe abandoning Mr. Biden's agenda would be a massive mistake. There is a clear path forward to deliver a historically significant, fiscally responsible bill that supports working families, expands access to affordable health care and combats the climate crisis. If the president wants this bill to be his legacy, he must urge Congress to stop playing games with expiration dates and do fewer things better — starting with Progressives and centrists will both have to forego some items on their legislative wish list. Many worthwhile policy ambitions, such as creating a national paid family leave program or extending a recent expansion of the Child Tax Credit, which has already lifted millions of children out of poverty, will need to be dramatically scaled back or tabled altogether. But the policies that do get enacted will be more successful, more popular and more durable as a result, which can help lay the groundwork for building on them in the future. It would also leave Democrats with a bill that is more focused and easier to explain to voters than the current version, which Republicans are already portraying as a "progressive grab bag."

In October, my organization, the Progressive Policy Institute, published a blueprint for such a focused package that prioritized expanding the Child Tax Credit, making preschool universally available, strengthening the Affordable Care Act and combating climate change. That approach now has renewed interest from key Democrats on Capitol

Senator Ron Wyden of Oregon, who leads the Finance Committee in Not only would this scenario deny new families tens of thousands of the Senate and will be responsible for writing many of the final bill's key provisions, released a statement on Sunday listing three top spending priorities: the expanded Child Tax Credit, subsidies for health insurance under the Affordable Care Act and incentives for reducing carbon emissions from all energy sources.

That same day, Representative Suzan DelBene of Washington, who presides over the 97-member New Democrat Coalition that will be crucial for passing the final bill through the House, released a statement embracing nearly identical priorities and reiterating her coalition's preference for "doing a few things well for longer," which is also the approach Mr. Manchin has demanded.

The only major sticking point now seems to be the expanded Child Tax Credit. Last week, Mr. Manchin reportedly told Mr. Biden he would support a $1.8 trillion package that omitted the credit but included longterm versions of Mr. Wyden and Ms. DelBene's other top priorities, as well as a universal prekindergarten program. Those policies combined would cost roughly $1.2 trillion over 10 years, which means that if Democrats can compromise on additional priorities that cost less than $600 billion, whether that's a modified Child Tax Credit expansion or other permanent programs, they will have produced a transformative bill that fits within the parameters Mr. Manchin supports. Importantly, these permanent policies would not increase budget deficits or inflationary pressures because they can be fully paid for using only the tax increases and other offsets included in the Build Back Better Act.

Democrats have a once-in-a-generation opportunity to improve American society, not just for a few years, but permanently. Doing so would give them some clear victories they can point to with voters that lay the groundwork for future success. But to get such a package across the finish line, progressives and centrists — including both the White House and the senator from West Virginia — must stop pointing fingers, come back to the negotiating table, and compromise. America cannot afford for the Biden agenda to fail.

How to win over the unvaccinated

By Anupam B. Jena and Christopher M. Worsham

At this point in the pandemic, many Americans remain unvaccinated because they believe the coronavirus vaccine is unlikely to do them any good. They're aware of the virus and the damage it can cause, but for any number of reasons, they simply don't believe they should get a vaccine. We've spoken to patients like this in our practice, and we have observed intended to change their beliefs is ineffective for many or may even cause further entrenchment against vaccination.

Public health experts have tried many different methods to motivate behavior like vaccination. Our recent research shows even more clearly that providing additional information may not be one of the strongest

In a study published on Dec. 13, we examined data from about 750,000 children who were eligible to receive the human papilloma virus vaccine to prevent cervical cancer. Since the HPV vaccine was approved in 2006, it has experienced resistance from parents and religious and conservative groups who see it as promoting sexual behavior. Its politicization was a preview for what has happened with the coronavirus vaccines in the

Our research question was: Are mothers who themselves had cervical cancer more likely to have their children vaccinated against HPV? We thought that for this group of mothers, a lack of information about the consequences of HPV couldn't possibly affect their decision to vaccinate their children against the virus. These women had personally suffered from cervical cancer, so, presumably, they would be especially well informed about the harms of this virus and the disease it causes.

What we found surprised us: The girls and boys whose mothers had cervical cancer were no more likely to be vaccinated against HPV compared with children whose mothers had no history of cervical disease. Children whose mothers had a cancer "scare" — a biopsy of cervical cells that ended up not being cancerous — were only slightly more likely to be vaccinated. But having cervical cancer or a cervical cancer scare did not result in the large increase in vaccination rates that we were expecting.

Motivations behind vaccination decisions are complex; they vary in those conversations that providing more, frightening information from disease to disease and across time, social groups, culture and geography. But if personally having cervical cancer doesn't seem to motivate mothers to vaccinate their children against HPV, we probably shouldn't be surprised when hesitant Americans are not motivated to get vaccinated after a family member is hospitalized or even dies from Covid-19. Emergency room doctors sharing devastating stories from the hospital may, unfortunately, not meaningfully impact vaccination rates.

> Information about Covid-19 will continue to be valuable for people who are interested in being vaccinated and just need more data. But that may be only a small portion of the unvaccinated population now. If disbelief in the importance of vaccination is the primary barrier to reaching the country's vaccination goals, more information is unlikely that one of the best ways to motivate behavior is through incentives, either positive or negative. Incentives work because they do not force people to change their beliefs. A customer might switch cellphone providers not because he believes the new provider is better, but because the new provider is offering a free iPhone to switch (a positive incentive). A teenager might come home before curfew on a Saturday night not because she believes it's dangerous to be out late, but because she knows her parents will take away her car keys if she stays out past midnight (a negative incentive).

> Our past research has also shown that more information often isn't enough to change behavior. A classic example is doctors who struggle to follow the same medical advice that they give to patients. Despite doctors' extensive training and access to medical information, as a group, they are barely better than patients at sticking to recommendations for improving their health. This includes vaccinations. Rates of chickenpox vaccination among doctors' children, for example, are not meaningfully different from the rates among children whose parents are not doctors. While most parents vaccinate their children against chickenpox, you would expect the rates among doctors' families to be especially high.

What interventions might work? Behavioral science research suggests physician and public health researcher at Harvard Medical School.

While small positive incentives such as free doughnuts or entries into statewide lottery programs may have motivated some people, those and similar methods don't seem to motivate people to get vaccinated on a scale large enough to close the vaccination gap.

The incentive that seems to work especially well is the employer vaccine mandate, a negative incentive. "Get vaccinated or get fired" has shown to be an effective message. United Airlines, which mandated the coronavirus vaccination for its employees this past summer, reported in November that 100 percent of their customer-facing employees were vaccinated, and that only about 200 of their 67,000 employees had chosen termination over vaccination. Similar stories have played out among private and public sector employers that enforce mandates, with vaccination rates approaching 100 percent (including at our own

By now, it's clear that the public health system does not know how to change people's beliefs about vaccines. Until we do, America's leaders should focus on other strategies, especially the ones we already know are micron should not dim our lights

By Froma Harrop

The screaming headlines about New York City closing down again in response to the highly infectious new COVID-19 variant are premature. Sure, some things are dialing back, witness the cancellation of the Radio City Rockettes' "Christmas Spectacular." The reality is that the surrounding streets are clogged with celebrants viewing the store windows and the Christmas tree at Rockefeller Center.

December 2021 is not December 2020, when America's holiday season turned eerily quiet. This year, the governors of Colorado, New Jersey and Maryland — two Democrats and a moderate Republican, for those who keep score — are opposing renewed restrictions.

And for a good reason. The threat is not gone, especially with the highly infectious Omicron variant on the loose. But it's a lot less scary

In New York City, 83% of residents 12 years and older are fully vaccinated, meaning they've had two shots. They still remain at lower risk of serious disease. For those who've gotten the third shot, the risks appear to be no higher than they were before Omicron, when two jabs would do the job. As for those who haven't gotten any shots, they're on that the U.S. supply of mRNA vaccines — that is, the highly effective Pfizer-BioNTech and Moderna versions — is "abundant." This is a far cry from last December, when the first vaccine (Pfizer) came out but was very hard for nonmedical workers to obtain.

Rather than coercing the public, the vaccine mandates are seen as freeing most New Yorkers to largely resume their lives with very little fear of hospitalization or death, even in the event of a breakthrough infection. It doesn't matter if they're now dining next to tourists from Idaho or Florida, states that refused to institute vaccine mandates. The people at the next table had to show their COVID-19 vax cards or they couldn't get in.

Early reports suggest that Omicron, while far more transmissible than other variants, tends to produce milder symptoms in the infected. Even though Omicron has exploded the COVID-19 infection numbers in South Africa, hospitalizations there are way down. Other factors could be in play, but evidence has yet to emerge that Omicron is as nasty as the Delta variant.

Omicron has raised the number of hospitalizations in New York, not because it's shown itself to be especially deadly but because it has spread wildly. The recent surge in the infected has fatigued hospitals, but thanks to the city's high vaccination rate, its number of COVID-19 deaths per Meanwhile, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports 100,000 residents is less than half that of the United States as a whole

There's other reassuring news. Moderna says it will soon have a booster shot tailored for Omicron (if it's needed). And new treatments are rolling out for those already infected. The most promising one, from Pfizer, has been found to work 88% of the time in preventing hospitalization.

Given these developments, it would behoove the authorities in states with high vaccination rates (and restrictions on the unvaccinated) to let young children, whom the virus almost never hospitalizes, stay in their classrooms. And they should desist in backing panicky moves to stop a pandemic that was unstoppable a year ago but not now.

Yes, they will have to deal with new strains on hospitals and their workers. But they will be sending the wrong message if they let the unvaccinated spoil another year for those who've done the right things. For most of us, Omicron remains a concern but not a good reason to dim the lights this holiday season.

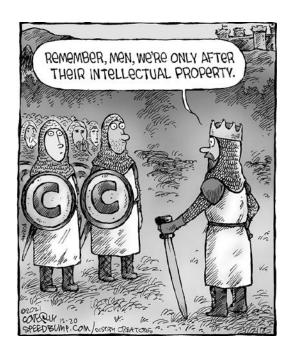

Discipline has its rewards. Those who have done the hard part should enjoy the relief it has delivered.

Cerritos College wrestlers win state championships

■ Jonathan Prata, Jonovan Smith bring home individual championships as the Falcons finish second as a team.

By John M. Sherrard Contributor

NORWALK - The Cerritos College Wrestling team may not have won a state title in the recently completed California Community College Athletic Association (CCCAA) State Championships, but to qualify a program record 12 wrestlers to the final competition of the season and wind up with two individual state champions, was huge for the Falcons.

Cerritos, which hosted the championships Dec. 10-11, finished second for the fourth time in the last 11 years, totaled 138.5 points, while Mt. San Antonio College had 167.0 for its first state championship in individuals. Cerritos has won four titles since 1971.

Fresno City College, which has won 16 titles, including the last four in a row, finished third with 117 points.

"It's been a tradition and a strong program for years," said Cerritos Wrestling coach Donny Garriott, of the Falcons long time

"I'm real excited about the future next year and another good recruiting class. We hope to have a real good offseason in the spring. I think the next couple of years will be fun."

Garriott, in his 15th year at Cerritos, is also the wrestling coach at South Torrance High School, where his son Cael just graduated this past June and is a Gray Shirt on the wrestling team at Cerritos and son Caden is an eighth grader.

Highlighting the two-day championship tournament for the Falcons were two individual state champions - Jonathan Prata at 125 Lbs. and Jonovan Smith (285 Lbs.).

Prata and Smith were named All-Americans along with five other Falcons - freshman Daniel Bracamontes, second place (157 Lbs.), freshman Caoilte Drury, third place (149 Lbs.), freshman Armando Murillo, third place (165 Lbs.), sophomore Roland Dominguez, fourth place (133 and freshman Stone Robledo, fourth place (174 Lbs.).

This final state championship tournament is actually the first time the whole team of starters has competed together for the Falcons.

sophomore, completed his two years nearly perfect, winning back-to-back championships. Prata, (21-1 this year) lost only two matches in his two years and won 43.

"Honestly, before I started wrestling (at Cerritos), we hosted the state meet (2018) and it was the best," said Prata, who grayshirted his first year at Cerritos. "I always wanted to win it at home.

"It (championship match) just went by so fast and I just did what I love to do - dominate."

Dominate he did, as Prata went 3-0 in the championships. Prata, seeded No. 1 South, had a first-round bye, a pin in the quarterfinals in the first period with less than a minute left and a 10-2 major decision in the Prata advanced to the finals and went up against his friend and competitor, South No. 2, Alexis Tellez of Rio Hondo.

"He is a close friend of mine, but once I step on the mat, everything changes," said Prata, who started wrestling in the fifth grade. "I know how to wrestle my matches and I just rely on my training."

final the championship matches at the state competition are under a spotlight, focused on the two wrestlers and Prata remembers

"The spotlight was pretty cool," said Prata, who missed parts of the early season with a toe injury. "It just made me focus on my opponent."

Prata scored takedowns in each the first and second periods for the 4-0 lead, heading into the final 2-minute third period.

Prata opened the third period with a two-point reversal for the 6-0 lead. Tellez gained his only point of the match with an escape late in the period.

With just four seconds left in the match, Prata had a takedown and then finished the match with a riding time score for the final, Prata, who is concluding his amazing career in college wrestling, is the first to win two consecutive titles at 125 Lbs. since Angel Olea (FCC) in 2007-08.

Prata will now focus on freestyle wrestling in some open tournaments in the U.S. and competing internationally with Argentina. He eventually wants to pursue a career as an electrician.

His father, Marcello Prata, is from Argentina and Jonathan Prata is hoping for dual citizenship for competition.

Jonathan Prata, who won CIF Individual titles in his sophomore, junior and senior years, said of the teams' success, "It felt great with a bunch of young guys."

Cerritos had sophomores this last season and 25 freshmen. Of the 12 wrestlers who competed at state, nine were freshmen and six of them were

"I think the reason for the low amount of sophomores this season was partly due to the pandemic," Garriott added. "A lot of the young men moved on to the next level."

Garriott praised the two-time champion and what he has meant to the program.

"The accolades that he had coming in, you don't get a lot of that," he said. "He's such a good kid, so easy going and it was such a pleasure to have him. Watching him was like watching water, so night, Smith became the 64th individual state champion for the Falcons, which is the second most all time in California.

South at 285 Lbs.

Smith, like Prata, was also 3-0 in state competition. He started out with a bye in the first round on Friday morning, followed by probably his most important match of the state tournament in the quarterfinals, with a win in that quick with so little time," he the third overtime.

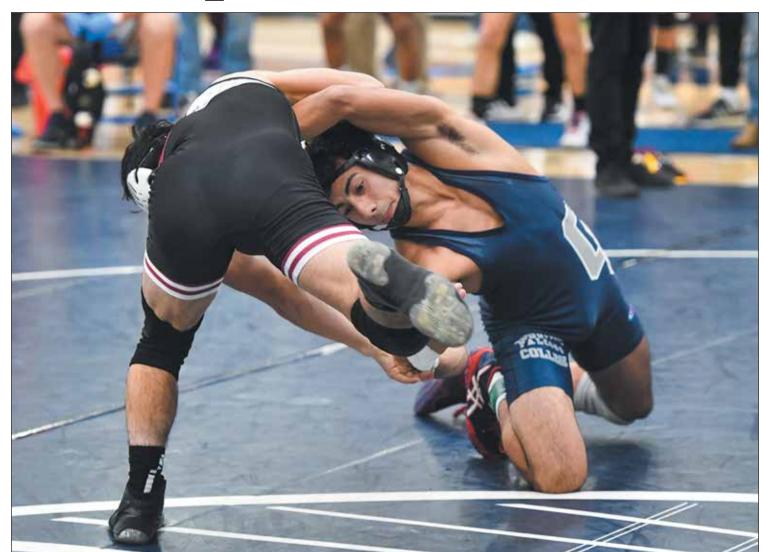

"That just goes to show that even against a guy like me against a competitor who's won Fargo (Freestyle Jr. Nationals) or who's won state, anything is still possible," Smith said. "The sun can shine anytime and anybody's beatable. I just like to use the best of my wits. (Bakersfield's Corbin Hayes) wrestled a smart match, but in the end, I knew that I could still outfox him."

Hayes, who was South No. 5, took a 2-0 lead in the first period with a takedown for two points. Smith then cut the lead in half, 2-1, with an early escape in the second period.

The drama then set in for the final period and overtime for the two wrestlers.

Hayes started the period on the bottom, but quickly escaped for the 3-1 lead. He received a stalling warning with less than a minute (:47) to go in the match, but 17 seconds later Smith tied the match with a takedown, 3-3. The final 22 seconds of the match were dramatic.

he escaped to take a one-point lead, 4-3, but with two seconds left, he received a second stalling penalty, which resulted in a point for Smith to tie the match, 4-4, to send it in to OT.

In the first OT, neither wrestler scored a takedown for a possible win, so the second and third overtimes would decide the

In the second OT, Smith was on the bottom to start and escaped with 12 seconds left for the, 5-4 lead. Almost the same scenario occurred in the third overtime, with Hayes escaping with 21 seconds left to tie the match, 5-5.

At that point, Hayes was "I remember right after he leading with riding time that > Garriott was surprised at the heavyweight's quick takedown.

> "I don't know that I've seen a heavyweight take down someone

In fact, it was so quick that Garriott actually missed that final move by Smith and only recently witnessed it on Instagram.

Smith, who was 31-1 this season, went on to win his semifinal match Saturday morning with a pin to advance to his first college championship match.

It turned out to be the classic title match with the best in the North versus the best in the

No. 1 North Seed Rudy Garcia from Fresno City College, who won the Nor Cal's, came into the title match with two pins in his two matches at state.

After a scoreless first period in the championship match, Smith built up a 5-1 lead in the second period with an escape and two takedowns.

Garcia's only point was an escape. In the third and final period, Smith had an escape and a point for riding time, while Garcia had two escapes, for the final score of 8-3.

"Jonovan can switch gears whenever he wants," Garriott said. "He's beautiful to watch.

"How great it was to start the championships with Jonathan (Prata, 125 Lb. champion) and end with Jonovan (Smith, 285 Lb. champion). Pretty good bookends.

The third Cerritos wrestler to reach the finals was Bracamontes in the 157 Lb. weight class.

Bracamontes, the South No. 1 Seed, had a first-round bye, a first-period pin in the quarterfinals and a 7-5 decision in the semifinals.

He lost by way of a pin by the North No. 1 Seed, Noah Cortez of

The future looks bright for the young Cerritos wrestlers in the near future, with numerous state qualifiers returning next season.

What they said:

Gene Choi, Cerritos Asst. wrestling coach: "This is what we've been waiting for. The Covid year kind of sucked.

"We were so excited at (So Cal) Regional when we got all 12 to state. It's super exciting to have 12. It's the first time in my coaching career to have 12.

"Donny (Garriott) was my high school coach and my first college coach (Cerritos)."

Note: Choi went on to wrestle San Francisco State after Cerritos and was an All American.

Jonathan Prata, (125 Lbs.) Cerritos sophomore wrestler: 'Coach Donny (Garriott) was like a father-figure to me. I love him. I've known him since high school.

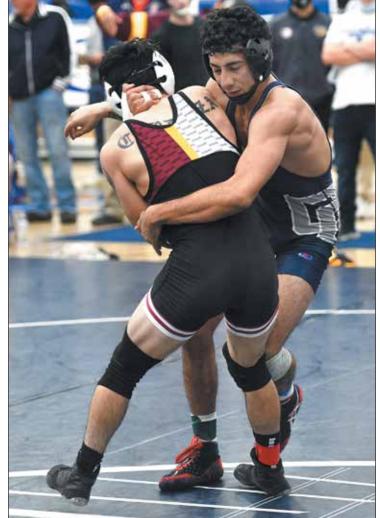

"Each match I try to improve. My first year (freshman) I was still learning and also the rules. In my matches, no one really beat me in riding time. That was domination and I just wanted to give it my all."

Bracamontes, (157 Lbs.) Cerritos freshman wrestler: "Luckily, after (the cancellation of the 2020 season) Covid I'm fortunate enough to be able to come back to wrestle at

"It feels good just to compete and sticking to the basics. I'm just grateful for the opportunities.

in the 157 Lb. weight class.

Cerritos freshman wrestler: "It's fun and we train for this. The training, the weight-cutting, the drilling, it's for the end of the season. It's all for this.

"I ended on a bad note in high school as I went two and out in state, but in (Community College) it's not over. I just have to wrestle back. I just like the sport. It's fun for me.

Note: Murillo won a CIF title in high school. He was 21-4 this season with Cerritos College.
