Downey schedules recall election for embattled councilwoman

Downey residents are trying to recall Catherine Alvarez for not disclosing her criminal record.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY -The recall election of Catherine Alvarez will take place on Jan. 31 next year.

The city council scheduled the special election at their meeting Tuesday, following the successful collection and verification of the 3,471 District 3 signatures needed to send the recall to ballot. In total, more than 4,500 signatures were submitted.

Whether Alvarez is recalled or not it will not come cheaply for Downey, potentially costing the city

January's special election will cost Downey taxpayers $571,000. Should Alvarez be removed, $571,000 more in the upcoming fiscal year will also need to be spent on an election to find her replacement

To try to circumvent these costs, there were calls Tuesday both by residents in attendance and Councilwoman Claudia Frometa for Alvarez to resign.

However, under the California elections code, the recall would need to proceed regardless whether Alvarez resigned due to the recall petition already having been filed.

This marks the first time the city of Downey will see a recall election.

Martinez resigns from city council, De León, Cedillo under pressure to follow

Los Angeles City Council has been in turmoil since a leaked recording revealed racist comments made by council members.

By City News Service

LOS ANGELES – One day after Nury Martinez resigned from the Los Angeles City Council in the fallout of the City Hall racism scandal, the wait continues Thursday to see if Councilmen recording and its leak. The meeting Kevin de León and Gil Cedillo will follow suit.

Both are under widespread pressure to step down following the weekend release of a recorded conversation from 2021 involving the three elected officials that included a series of racist remarks, uttered primarily by Martinez.

pressure, Under intense Martinez on Monday stepped down as council president, took a leave of absence on Tuesday, then resigned her seat altogether on Wednesday.

"It is with a broken heart that I resign my seat for Council District 6, the community I grew up in and my home," Martinez said in a written statement Wednesday afternoon.

Her lengthy statement made no direct reference to the recording that likely ended her political career, nor did it include an apology to Councilman Mike Bonin or any of the communities she directed racist slurs at in the tape - - although she said, "To my staff -- I'm sorry that we're ending it this way. This is no reflection on you. I know you all will continue to do great work and fight for our district. I'll be cheering you on."

In a statement moments after Martinez's announcement, acting City Council President Mitch O'Farrell said Martinez's resignation is the "first, necessary step in the process" of accountability. When asked later by reporters about Martinez's statement excluding those apologies, O'Farrell said: "I noticed that."

The recorded conversation was leaked, appearing on Reddit before being removed from the website. City News Service reviewed the conversation, but it was unclear who was responsible for the apparently occurred at a Federation of Labor office, and the federation is investigating its source.

Martinez issued a statement Monday announcing her decision to surrender the council presidency, and apologizing to Bonin, his husband Sean Arian and their son.

With Martinez resigning from her leadership role, O'Farrell, the council president pro tempore, was elevated to acting council president. He has repeatedly called for Martinez, de León and Cedillo -- all of whom took part in the recorded conversation -- to resign their council seats.

"The wound is deep," O'Farrell said. "The harm is vast. The transgressions are of a profound significance. In order for us to move forward with the people of Los Angeles, we need two more resignations.<sup>3</sup>

O'Farrell said he spoke with Cedillo for an hour Wednesday and claimed there was some progress made toward a resignation. He said he tried to reach de León all day, but was unable to connect.

At a news briefing Wednesday afternoon, several council members again expressed shock at the racist comments revealed in the recording involving their longtime colleagues, and implored the two remaining embattled council members to resign.

'When someone is being bullied, those around the bully have an obligation to step in and stop the to reflect, make amends and move bullying," said Councilman Paul forward with her life. Krekorian, when asked of Cedillo's

Councilman Bob Blumenfield said he hopes Martinez "gets the help that she needs."

"The revelations of this tape showed a very hateful heart and a disdain for others in a sick way," Blumenfield said.

Blumenfield added that the council needs to put together a leadership team that "leads instead of trying to rule."

Councilman Paul Koretz tried to isolate the incident to those on the recording.

"People out there will think this represents the conversation that council has," Koretz said. "I'm here to assure you: This is not the council. This is those three people."

Councilman Curren Price said Martinez's resignation signals "the beginning of the end of this nightmare that she, along with Kevin de León and Gil Cedillo created for our city."

"This sad chapter has left a permanent stain on our City Council, forever changing the face of L.A. politics," Price said.

At least two council members Krekorian and Marqueece Harris-Dawson - - signaled an intent to have a special election for Martinez's seat, as well as de León's seat if he resigns. Both of their terms expire in December 2024. Cedillo lost his re-election bid to Eunessis Hernandez earlier this year, and Krekorian suggested swearing in Hernandez immediately if Cedillo resigns.

Mayor Eric Garcetti issued statement saying, "Nury made the right decision, one that I realize is painful to her personally but unquestionably in the best interests of a city that I know she loves. Racism and hateful words cannot ever be overlooked by our community or within one's self, and she needs the time and space

On Wednesday morning, O'Farrell was forced to adjourn the council meeting before it even began, with protesters chanting and shouting in the council chamber for Martinez, De León and Cedillo to resign.

O'Farrell called several recesses After about an hour, O'Farrell announced that the meeting was being adjourned, with all items on the agenda postponed until Friday's scheduled meeting.

O'Farrell said it will be nearly impossible for the council to conduct its business until all three council members involved in the taped conversation resign.

"It's holding us up from moving forward," he said. "The emotions are only going to flare up more and more and more. This is not going to calm down. It's at a boiling point. It's boiling over."

O'Farrell said he gave the protesters the benefit of the doubt Wednesday, but noted that council meetings need to resume "at some point very, very soon."

It was unclear how Friday's scheduled council meeting might unfold, with officials confirming that a virtual meeting was a possibility.

Michael Hunt, one of the protesters who showed up at Wednesday's meeting, said activists plan on returning to disrupt meetings until the council members little monkey.' resign.

Martinez, 49, had served on the council since 2013 representing the Sixth District in the San Fernando Valley. She was the second Latina to serve on the council and was its only female member when she was elected. Six years later, she became the first Latina to become council president when she was elected in 2019, replacing long-time President Herb Wesson.

Prior to being elected to the council, Martinez served on the San in hopes of quieting the crowd, but Fernando City Council from 2003the protesters refused to relent. 09 and on the Los Angeles Unified School District Board of Education from 2009-2013.

> Martinez's term runs through December 2024. It was not immediately clear if the council would call a special election to fill her seat.

De León, 55, has been on the council since 2020 and made an unsuccessful run for mayor this year. He previously served in the state Senate and Assembly. Cedillo, 68, has been in office since 2013.

Among other comments in the recorded conversation, Martinez belittled Bonin, who is white and openly gay, and criticized his adopted Black son for his behavior at a Martin Luther King Day parade, saving the boy was misbehaving on a float, which might have tipped over if she and other women hadn't stepped in to "parent this kid."

Martinez also called the child "ese changuito," Spanish for "that De León also criticized Bonin. "People want the City Council to "Mike Bonin won't f---ing ever say do the work of the people, not the peep about Latinos. He'll never say a f---ing word about us," he said.

> De León also compared Bonin's handling of his son at the Martin Luther King Jr. Day Parade to "when Nury brings her little yard

"Su negrito, like on the side," Martinez added, using a Spanish term for a Black person that's considered demeaning by many.

At another point in the leaked conversation, Martinez recalls a conversation with businessman Danny Bakewell about possibly transferring Los Angeles International Airport out of Bonin's council district into Harris-Dawson's.

Martinez said she told Bakewell to "go get the airport from his little brother -- that little bitch Bonin."

On the subject of Councilman Mark Ridley-Thomas' suspension following an indictment on federal corruption charges, Martinez said Controller Ron Galperin would decide whether Ridley-Thomas still gets paid.

"You need to go talk to that white guy," she says. "It's not us. It's the white members on this council that will motherf--- you in a heartbeat.'

Martinez also took aim at Los Angeles County District George Gascón in profane terms, after the group appeared to discuss whether Gascón would endorse Cedillo in his re-election campaign against Hernandez.

"F--- that guy. (inaudible) ... He's with the Blacks," she said of Gascón.

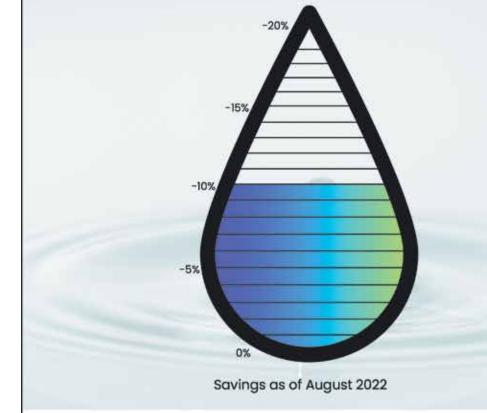

Martinez, de León, Herrera and Cedillo apologized separately on Sunday for their roles in the conversation.

"In a moment of intense frustration and anger, I let the situation get the best of me and I hold myself accountable for these comments. For that I am sorry,' Martinez said in a statement provided to City News Service on Sunday.

"My work speaks for itself. I've worked hard to lead this city through its most difficult time."

Going to therapy doesn't automatically make you a good person

By Mychal Denzel Smith

When my new therapist asked why I was seeking therapy this past summer, I didn't have a concrete answer.

It wasn't like the first time I'd gone to therapy, as a 21-year-old experiencing severe panic attacks every day. Then, a clear crisis had sent me out in search of someone to help me work it out.

This time it was more that I felt I should be in therapy. Most of the people in my social orbit are in therapy. A few are therapists themselves. My experience has been that therapy is good for me. But I had also managed the past few years — through a pandemic at that — without it, and I didn't think I was on the verge of some total breakdown. I just figured going to therapy should be a part of my life. So I put it on my list of resolutions: learn Spanish; exercise three to four times a week; read more books; go to therapy.

I can't say how much influence the way other people, especially on social media, talk about therapy had on my decision-making, but I'm sure it seeped in. There are armchair diagnoses of celebrities and other public figures happening in real time, alongside tweets admonishing people who display troubling behavior with the phrase "go to therapy!" There are detailed fantasies unfurled in long threads about what the world might look like if everyone (but especially cis-hetero-men) went to therapy and worked out their issues — all of the toxic masculinity poisoning the wells of communication and paths to healing. By not going to therapy, I reasoned — or maybe just felt — I was failing not only myself but also a vision of a utopia that existed just on the other side of a therapist's couch. So I went.

Was I the only person doing this? I suspected not — and so I asked my therapist. Had she seen more people coming into her office, not because of some diagnosable mental illness or catastrophic life event, or even really any particular problem at all, but because it seemed, in some way, the right thing to do?

"Absolutely," she told me, "I have had people come in and tell me, 'I just feel like I'm supposed to be here." And my therapist wasn't the only one. I talked to therapists, counselors and psychoanalysts from Virginia Beach to San Francisco, via phone, email and Zoom. And most of them agreed: People are showing up on their couches without knowing exactly why.

More people are receiving mental health treatment or counseling than ever before: In 2008, the year I first sought therapy, 30.2 million adults in the United States were getting help; by 2020, the number had risen to 41.4 million.

Of course, the past few years, since the pandemic arrived, have been a period of crisis, and it's natural that more people would seek therapy to deal with the stresses of isolation and anxiety about illness. But it's not just that. There has also been a sustained effort over the past decade or more to destigmatize mental illness and promote mental health, coming from activists, artists, celebrities and local governments. (I've written and spoken about the issue many times myself.)

There is no official point at which we can say that therapy is destigmatized, and it may well continue to be looked down upon in some communities (and for others, therapy remains inaccessible). Still, these efforts seem to be working. The list of celebrities opening up about their mental health issues grows by the day — Ryan Reynolds has spoken about his anxiety, Jonah Hill announced he would no longer do press tours because of panic attacks, and everyone from Selena Gomez to Jay-Z has extolled the virtues of therapy and mental health care. On an episode of Taraji P. Henson's show "Peace of Mind With Taraji," which highlights mental health issues, particularly within Black communities, the rapper Megan Thee Stallion talked about her struggles after the death of her mother and how she had come to view therapy differently.

But I've started to wonder if there's a flip side to this new openness, a new form of judgment that has broken down into a too-simple binary: In therapy, good; not in therapy, bad.

This summer, The Times ran an article headlined "Seeking Relationship, Therapy Required" about single people who insisted that their would-be partners be in therapy — who, seemingly, saw being in therapy as a signal for the kind of person they were looking for, the way someone might want a partner who votes in every election or buys organic. "The way u people use 'therapy' to telegraph ur feelings of moral superiority is corrupting our relationships and sucking the romance out of life," a tweet in response to the story said. "Some of the best people have never, never been to therapy," the user said in a follow-up.

In our conversations, therapists confirmed the idea that people are going to therapy without a goal broader than "working on themselves," and sometimes to show others that they are working on themselves. This, they said, can sometimes make sessions slightly confusing, or rudderless.

"As a therapist, I often tend to feel stuck with clients who share this as a primary motivation, without any specific insight into why or how therapy might help them," Madeleine Campbell, a therapist working in Brooklyn, told me via email. "A client's experience with therapy is the result of what they put into it. If a client doesn't have any specific goals or intentions for our time working together, it can be hard to know how to make progress."

"Therapy should be productive," Andrea Gutiérrez-Glik, who started her practice in New York City but moved to St. Louis, Mo., during the pandemic, told me over the phone. "You're paying a lot of money, or you're using health insurance that you work really hard for." The point, she said, is "not just to be like, 'OK, I've done something for the day."

More than a couple therapists said this phenomenon was most common with cis men. They are in therapy but don't go with any particular issue they want to resolve or trauma they want to address. They go because their friends are in therapy, or their partner thinks they should be, or they have in some other way received the message that it's what they should be doing. People in therapy want other people they are around to be in therapy, too. (Ms. Campbell said her Gen Z and millennial clients are the ones most likely to talk to her about "challenges in their own relationships — familial, romantic, friendships, etc. — with people in their lives who 'aren't in therapy.")

Is therapy-as-box-checking a problem? Not necessarily. Even among the people whose only reason for starting therapy is that they think they're supposed to, there is something they could discuss, starting with why they feel that way in the first place. How do they respond to others' expectations? How can they find the roots of their own desires? It's also difficult to live in the modern world and not be carrying at least a little trauma.

But the biggest issue, which therapists themselves told me, is that the fixation on therapy as the go-to cure-all leaves little room for people seeking other forms of healing.

Therapy, for all that it can help with, is mostly an individual practice. The focus is on the self and the relationship to the self, even though the self, too, is informed by outside forces. Therapy can offer a pathway toward understanding, but it can also overshadow the idea of healing in community.

"A lot of the things people are going to therapy for, they're issues that have become personal, but started off as cultural," said Nityda Gessel, who has an integrated psychotherapy and yoga practice in my hometown, Virginia Beach. "That shared experience is very important." For instance, something like impostor syndrome, which shows up often as a discussion topic that members of minority groups take to therapy, is experienced as personal — I don't believe I'm worthy — but its roots are in receiving that message via a culture that devalues certain identities.

What is often left out of the "go to therapy!" discourse is politics, or bodywork, or even things like a book club — anything that helps you feel connected to both yourself and the world outside of you provides purpose, and can help locate the source of pain while also allowing community to form.

I still find my therapy sessions useful. There may not have been a major catalyst for my going this year, but it has been helpful as I've dealt with my granny's death, my mom's cancer diagnosis, and all the complex emotions that come about with expectant fatherhood that have cropped up recently. I'm grateful for the space to talk it out. But I'm also grateful to be able to cry in my partner's arms, to dance with friends, to sit out on my Brooklyn terrace and smoke a cigar in the autumn air. There's no magic bullet for mental wellness; there is no single prescription for becoming a "good" person. Most of us are doing our best.

Mychal Denzel Smith has written extensively about mental health. He is the author, most recently, of "Stakes Is High: Life After the American Dream."

The Cuban missile crisis was 60 years ago, but it's urgently relevant today

By Katrina vanden Heuvel

Next week marks 60 years since the Cuban missile crisis — the 13-day standoff between the United States and the Soviet Union widely regarded as the closest we ever came to global nuclear war. On this anniversary, as we veer terrifyingly close to the brink of Armageddon once again, we should look annihilation and how we can step back from that brink.

One chilling reminder of how crises are sometimes averted was first offered by former secretary of state Dean Acheson in 1969. Reviewing "Thirteen Days," Robert F. Kennedy's posthumous memoir, Acheson, who advised President John F. Kennedy during the Cuba crisis, strikingly contended that nuclear war was averted thanks to "plain dumb luck." Sure enough, it has since come to light that a nuclear missile came close to being fired not once but twice — once by the 498th Tactical Missile Group on Okinawa, Japan, and once by a Soviet submarine in Cuban waters. In both instances, the resistance of a single individual derailed a launch. know that though our great nation and the United States were in complete ruins, the national honor of the Soviet Union was intact?"

Today, as the world faces the threat of obliteration once more, figures of all stripes are calling for dialogue to prevent doomsday. A small but growing list of progressive members of Congress (along with several peace advocacy organizations) are increasingly focused on how best to promote de-escalation and dialogue, inspired by a truth that Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky has himself maintained: This war "will only definitively end through diplomacy." Pope Francis issued an unprecedented statement calling for global leaders "to do everything possible to bring an end to the war." Even former secretary of state Henry Kissinger has reiterated the importance of dialogue. As he recently argued, "This has nothing to do with whether one likes Putin or not. ... We are dealing, when nuclear weapons become introduced, with a historic alteration in the world system. And a dialogue between Russia and the West is important."

to that crisis to guide us in resolving our present one.

Last Friday, President Biden warned that in the Ukraine war, "for the first time since the Cuban missile crisis, we have a direct threat to the use of nuclear weapons." The warning is well founded. Top Kremlin ally Ramzan Kadyrov, head of the Chechen Republic, recently wrote that Russia should consider "the use of low-yield nuclear weapons." Russian TV and military blogs echo such suggestions. And Russian President Vladimir Putin has stressed that he is willing to use "all means" in the conflict.

It's impossible to know whether Putin is willing to follow through on his threat. Harvard Kennedy School professor Matthew Bunn pegs the chances at about 10 to 20 percent. But we do know how to reduce the risk of catastrophe. The Cuban missile crisis proved that even in the face of potential nuclear devastation, de-escalation is possible and diplomacy can prevail.

Experts and scholars have relitigated the crisis for decades. But in recent years, archives and memoirs have clarified the picture of what happened during those 13 days starting on Oct. 16, 1962. The tale is clearly articulated in "Gambling With Armageddon," a 2020 book by Pulitzer-winning historian Martin J. Sherwin that the New York Times declared "should become the definitive account" of the event. The book offers urgently relevant lessons — both about the circumstances that can bring humanity to the edge of

Of course, the world cannot rely on luck alone to prevent nuclear disaster. In 1962, according to political scientist Graham Allison, Kennedy put the odds of nuclear war "between one in three and even." If Kennedy's assessment was accurate, then after just a few more comparable confrontations, "the likelihood of nuclear war would approach certainty." Humanity cannot afford to spin the cylinder again in this game of Russian roulette; we must unload the gun. Our only path forward is de-escalation.

And de-escalation, as Sherwin makes clear, begins with dialogue. During the Cuban missile crisis, people such as Gen. Curtis LeMay argued that negotiation was tantamount to appeasement. But levelheaded discussion is essential to avoiding certain doom. To sacrifice it in the name of jingoistic posturing is not just absurd; it's potentially apocalyptic. As Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev recalled, "The biggest tragedy, as [my military advisers] saw it, was not that our country might be devastated and everything lost, but that the Chinese or the Albanians might accuse us of appeasement or weakness. ... What good would it have done me in the last hour of my life to We cannot waver from the conviction that nuclear weapons must never be used again under any circumstances. We would be wise at this grave moment to recall the lessons of history — encapsulated in Sherwin's work — and repeat, loudly and often, the November 1985 declaration of President Ronald Reagan and Russian President Mikhail Gorbachev, restated as recently as January by the leaders of the five nuclear weapons states: "A nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought."

Biden's support for pot prohibition ignores marijuana's harm

By Daily Editorials

"We have to hold every drug user accountable," Sen. Joe Biden declared in 1989, "because if there were no drug users, there would be no appetite for drugs, and there would be no market for them." The mass pardon for lowlevel marijuana offenders that the president announced last week suggests how far he has traveled since his years as a gung-ho drug warrior, even as it demonstrates that he remains out of step with the times.

Biden's decision applies to anyone convicted of simple marijuana possession under the Controlled Substances Act or the District of Columbia Code. He said the pardons will help "thousands of people who were previously convicted of simple possession" and "who may be denied employment, housing, or educational opportunities as a result."

As an act of clemency, the blanket pardon is massive. But in the context of a prohibition that has generated nearly 29 million arrests since 1965, it looks less impressive. Rep. Dave Joyce (R-Ohio), co-chair of the Congressional Cannabis Caucus, notes that "more than 14 million cannabis-related records at the state and local level continue to preclude Americans from stable housing and gainful employment."

Because simple marijuana possession is rarely prosecuted at the federal level, the vast majority of such cases are beyond the president's clemency powers. But Biden's mercy notably did not extend to people convicted of manufacturing or distributing marijuana under federal law, who still languish in prison or carry the lifelong burden of felony records.

The injustice of that situation is especially striking now that most states treat those federal felonies as legitimate business activities. Depending on the jurisdiction, the same conduct that can send someone to federal prison for years, decades or even life can make someone else a rich and respected entrepreneur.

By himself, Biden does not have the authority to resolve the untenable conflict between state and federal marijuana laws. But despite his avowed transformation from an anti-drug zealot into a criminal justice reformer, he has stubbornly opposed efforts to repeal the federal ban on marijuana.

That position is contrary to the preferences expressed by more than two-thirds of Americans, including four-fifths of Democrats and half of Republicans. The most Biden is willing to offer them is his rhetorical support for decriminalizing cannabis consumption — a policy that was on the cutting edge of marijuana reform in the 1970s.

Fifty years ago, when less than 20% of Americans thought pot should be legal, the Nixon-appointed Shafer Commission recommended that "possession of marijuana for personal use no longer be an offense." President Jimmy Carter endorsed decriminalization in 1977, when he told Congress that "penalties against possession of a drug should not be more damaging to an individual than the use of the drug itself."

Half a century later, Biden has finally come around to that position. "Sending people to jail for possessing marijuana has upended too many lives — for conduct that is legal in many states," he said on Twitter last week.

The same thing is true of sending people to jail for growing or selling marijuana, of course, although that is a point Biden refuses to acknowledge. The moral logic of his distinction between simple possession and other marijuana offenses is hard to follow.

Back in 1989, when Biden was keen to show that Democrats could be even tougher on drugs than Republicans, he correctly identified the source of the problem he was fighting: Americans who defied the law by choosing to consume intoxicants that Congress had arbitrarily proscribed. Without those individual decisions, he noted, there would be no black market to suppress.

Now Biden says marijuana use should not be treated as a crime. But if so, how can helping people use marijuana justify arresting, prosecuting and imprisoning anyone?

There is no satisfying answer to that question. And even as he recognizes the grievous harm caused by "our failed approach to marijuana," Biden has not attempted to supply one.

Top-ranked Cerritos College shows why it's No. 1 with win over Mt. SAC

By John M. Sherrard Contributor

NORWALK – A huge victory for the Cerritos College Men's Soccer team strengthened its hold on the top spot in the California Community College Athletic Association, with a 2-1 victory over defending state champion Mt. San Antonio College Wednesday afternoon (Oct. 12) at Cerritos in a South Coast Conference crossover game.

A stingy defense by the Falcons held Mt. SAC to only two shots on goal, one of which scored.

In a game that took two days to complete, due to a halt in play on Tuesday afternoon when lightning delayed the game in the first half. The Falcons kept the Mounties from scoring in the second half on Wednesday, when the game was restarted.

With the win, the nation's No. 2-ranked (United Soccer Coaches, DIII) Falcons remained unbeaten with an overall 11-0-2 record and 3-0 in the SCC South Conference.

Mt. SAC falls to 10-3 and 2-1 in the SCC North.

"I told them to treat it like a 90-minute game and to play as if we were starting from the beginning," said Cerritos assistant coach Jose Esparza, who was filling in for head coach Benny Artiaga after receiving a one-game suspension from a previous game.

Esparza was referring to the partial game on day two, as they finished the final seven minutes of the first half and the whole second half that were not completed due to the delay.

"We wanted to re-establish the tempo and set the tone for the game and stick to our Cerritos roots on how we play. The players had an approach of staying on the positive side of everything and work hard from beginning to end. (Wednesday) we made sure our boys understood how important it was to finish strong and manage to keep the ball as much as we can."

With the score tied, 1-1, the go-ahead score came late in the first half in the 30th minute by freshman forward Julian Vazquez, on a play that started with sophomore midfielder Gabriel Oropeza near midfield.

Oropeza passed the ball up to sophomore forward Pablo Caparelli, who crossed it to Vazquez, who knocked the ball into the left side of the net. Just eight minutes later, the game came to a stop.

"Playing Mt. SAC back-to-back was not something normal that happens," Esparza said. "We took full control for 38 minutes, even though our center back made a mistake, we were able to make a great comeback."

Esparza explained how a over aggressive slide tackle in the 18yard box led to a Mt. SAC penalty kick in the eighth minute.

Sophomore midfielder Alex Mendez took his time for the penalty kick and scored to the right side of Cerritos freshman goal keeper Juan Pablo Camacho for the 1-0 lead.

Six minutes later in the 14th minute, the Falcons evened the score, 1-1, after a mistake by Mt. SAC goalie Daniel Ramirez didn't get a complete foot on a clearing attempt and sophomore forward Michael Rodriguez sent a high kick over Ramirez, who was out of the goal, for the score.

"You can't explain that high energy game," Mt. SAC coach Juan Sanchez said. "That was the start when both teams came out on fire and tried to get on top of the score. We got one early but they got us on two very good scores.

As expected, the game was rough with seven total yellow cards handed out, four of which went to Mt. SAC and three to the Falcons.

One of those went to Cerritos captain, Tony Negrete, who knew how important the win was over the 6-time state champion Mounties

"I thought this was a very big victory," Negrete said. "Beating Mt. SAC just boosted it even more.

"We are all going to keep an even pace and are very well prepared. It's very exciting to be part of it and create our own legacy.

Negrete, who is a midfielder, was moved back to the center back position late in the game and it
