Biola, Azuza Pacific waterpolo match pits sisters against sisters

Coaches Sarah Orozco (Biola), Priscilla Orozco (APU); Players Samantha Rainey (Biola), Shyanne Rainey (APU) face each other one time at CBU tourney.

By John M. Sherrard Contributor

LA MIRADA - The sport of water polo can sometimes be a family affair.

Saturday, Jan. 28, at Cal Baptist University in Riverside in the Annual Joust Tournament, two families came together for one afternoon

Two sets of sisters were on both sides of the pool in a very evenly played game.

What made it all happen was the hiring last summer of Biola Women's Water Polo coach, Sarah Orozco's sister, Priscilla Gomez (Orozco) at rival Azusa Pacific University to head up the women's water polo program.

Already in place was the other set of sisters, Samantha and Shyanne Rainey, who were already on the two rosters.

Samantha Rainey is a secondyear goalie for Biola and twin sister, Shyanne, is in her fourth season with the Cougars.

Sarah Orozco is in her second year as coach of the Eagles and faced her sister, Priscilla, for the first time in their competitive lives.

Both Orozco sisters come into the two programs with great credentials.

Sarah and Priscilla both played at UCLA and won NCAA Championships in 2008, '09.

It'll be fun. It makes me feel, as a newcomer, comfortable just to know there's other women around that have already gone through the experience and have that advice and there's a place for myself."

An additional wrinkle into this family affair with the two programs is, who will get their baby sister into their program.

Younger sister, Salma Orozco, is a senior at Montebello High School playing water polo and will have to choose a college for next year. Could it be Biola? or will it be APU?

got to win," said an excited, Roldan Gonzalez. "That's all we wanted for (Saturday).'

Leading, 9-8, with 2:52 left in the game, APU's Maritza Ochoa tied the game, 9-9, to set up the dramatic finish.

Leading the team was Biola junior attacker Kourtney Pyle with three goals.

"I'm just so happy that my team her goal. "Samantha played a great second half. You can feel once she went into the cage, the team was right behind her and trusted her. She blocked my first one with a great block and on my goal my teammate passed it to me and I knew right when I had it I looked at Samantha. she looked at me, I looked away and she followed my eyes and I shot it into the top corner."

Samantha smiled and said of Ochoa led the Cougars also with her sisters' goal, "I fell into her trap. I really did. I fell into the trap of

Sam Rainey, Samantha and Shyanne's dad: "It's exciting and interesting and both (APU and Biola) evenly matched. You can see the two teams are next to each other with a lot of fellowship."

David Gomez, Priscilla Orozco (Gomez) husband: "I'm happy for both of them. Honestly, it's special to get to the same level. They were playing together for so many years As for the stuff of her sister and now they get to go against each other so it'll be fun. It's special to see their water polo years take off. It's just amazing. Frank Ramirez, Sarah Orozco (Ramirez) husband: "Her (Priscilla) little sister (Salma) right now actually is trying to decide which school to go to. It's a family feud. At family functions her dad has such a passion for water polo and is torn. He brings out the excitement and 1870: The Fifteenth Amendment he is always such a great family man. It's all fun and it's competitive and it's all family. Sarah was at APU beforehand and actually recruited one or two on their roster. She was part of that (APU) culture. It's come full circle. It's great.'

THINGS TO DO

Grease All Weekend La Mirada Theater for the Performing Arts

After a whirlwind summer romance, leather-clad greaser Danny and girl-next-door Sandy are unexpectedly reunited when she transfers to Rydell High for senior year. But can they survive the trials and tribulations of teenage life and find true love?

ON THIS DAY

1468: German craftsman, inventor, and printer Johannes Gutenberg, whose printing press was considered a historychanging invention, died in Mainz.

1690: Massachusetts issued the first paper money in the American colonies.

1811: Newspaper editor Horace Greeley, known as one of the most persuasive antislavery voices in the antebellum North, was born in Amherst, New Hampshire.

for the last six years and led her team to the CIF playoffs in five of those years.

Only one time previous to Saturday's rival game, the two sisters were on the opposite sides of the pool deck, but not as coaches.

Priscilla Orozco was an assistant at the very site of Saturday's game as an assistant coach for CBU and Sarah Orozco was a senior for the Bruins

But this particular Saturday they were both NCAA DII Women's Water Polo coaches facing each other.

"It's exciting," Sarah Orozco (Ramirez) said. "It's a classic rivalry – APU and Biola – with our faith schools. It's pretty awesome with our faith and our teams and playing water polo.

"We both are laser focused in, so we worry about how our girls can do their best and we translate our energy and our knowledge of the sport to the teams. We both looked good (Friday).

exhilarating (seeing "It's Priscilla). You're coaching now and once was a player and now there's all this kind of attention on you with the responsibility, but it's exciting.

"I'm competitively more excited because it's the last time we get to play (APU) this season.'

Before the game, they were taking in the moment talking alongside the pool while their respective teams readied themselves for the game.

Just two sisters talking about the sport they love and their families before the Cornerstone Cup game began.

Said Priscilla: "That's our competitive nature. We always want to get that win. For me, it's that healthy competition and as long as both teams are giving it their best effort that's what we're here for.

"This is how we feel about it. We're just happy to get this opportunity to be within actual family and compete at this level. It's a unique experience. We've never coached against each other.

The recruiting is getting intense.

"Our little sister is trying to come to either school," Sarah Orozco said. "So, she's in the middle of making her decision. Family is really important to us, so we'll see."

Priscilla, like most sisters, finished Sarah's comments about their sister and her aspirations for college.

"Her main focus wasn't just water polo like ours," Priscilla said. "Her main focus is going to a faith school," Sarah added.

That, evidently, narrows it down to Biola and APU. "We happen to be both (faith schools) and playing water polo is a little bit secondary, but we'll see."

As for the Rainey twins, they faced each other only once last season in a non-conference game.

Talking to Biola goalie Samantha Rainey before the game, she pointed out that her sister, Shyanne, didn't score on her in their 2022 game. Shyanne did take four shots.

"One of the shots she took was a back hand that sailed over the goal," pointed out, Samantha Rainey.

As for the sister connection to the sport, Shyanne said, "I think it's fun. because it shows that water polo is a family sport, and it is a close-knit family. It's super cool to see it come out in sports.

"They (Sarah and Priscilla) played together in college and now they're competing against each other in college in sort of a way as head coaches. That's also neat to see that at the pool and be able to coach a sport that they both love."

Biola scores buzzer beater over APU, 10-9

As for the game itself, it couldn't have been more even with a 10-9 win for Biola over Azusa Pacific.

With the game tied, 9-9, Biola had the ball last and with one second left, junior utility Maria Roldan Gonzalez (2 G) swam the ball down and lobbed a long shot into the top right corner for the buzzer beater.

Birch.

"It's always good to win, especially against APU," Spadt said. "But because they are Biola's rival, I wouldn't say that they are our women's water polo rival, because we love those girls. But a win is a win and as a school it's always good to beat APU.'

> Madeline Schultz scored two goals for the Cougars.

APU took the 2-1 lead after one period, but the Eagles and both teams offenses opened up in the second period.

In the first minute and a half, Biola scored three goals behind Pyle, Birch and Veralie Naranjo to take a 4-2 lead.

APU came storming back with three of its own goals to regain the lead, 5-4.

With 17 seconds left in the first half, Birch tied the game, 5-5.

The teams nearly alternated scoring the rest of the way, leading up to the big finish by the eagles.

Two highlights in the game, was a big stop by Biola goalie Samantha Rainey of her sister Shyanne early in the third period. However, just less than two minutes later it was Shyanne's turn to score her first goal on her sister Samantha in their two official non-conference games played.

"It was fun," said Shyanne, of Shyanne, Samantha answered, "I can't believe I smiled at her when I did that.

Priscilla and Sarah summed up the tightly played game and their first time facing each other on the pool deck as coaches in a nonconference game.

"We definitely wanted to try different strategies and wanted to see what would work," Priscilla said. "Yeah, I think it was good competition for both teams.

"It was a unique and special experience. There was no hostility and even the refs were excited for this game. They had seen us play since we were young."

Sarah added, "I've actually seen two buzzer beaters before. We just wanted to get the win over APU. It feels normal. Me and her (Priscilla), we've played together in the water and we read our every move. Our energy as players has been translated as coaches, which gives you a good game.'

What they said:

Debora Rainey, Samantha and Shyanne's mom: "It's been unique the whole season. It kind of brings everybody together a little bit as a family. We were in Arizona last week and Sarah and Priscilla's mom was there. It was kind of a family thing it seems like.

They are both strong in their positions, so we (husband Sam)

Cerritos prevails in Norwalk truck route case

NORWALK - A trial court has ruled in favor of the City of Cerritos in a case brought by the City of Norwalk last October.

The case was a public nuisance action brought by Norwalk against Cerritos based on increased truck traffic originating from a distribution center in a neighboring city, and the limitations imposed on commercial and heavy weight trucks on local Cerritos streets.

Cerritos filed a demurrer to Norwalk's complaint, to dismiss the entire lawsuit

"The City of Cerritos is very pleased that the trial court heard the matter this week and ruled in favor of Cerritos," Cerritos Mayor Chuong Vo said in a statement.

The main argument and ruling of the court was summarized as follows:

"[Cerritos] has the better argument here. By the explicit terms of the [Cerritos] ordinance, [Cerritos] has implemented a vehicle weight restriction ... on various streets pursuant to Vehicle Code section 35701, subdivision (a).... (Although [Cerritos] has not acted pursuant to any part of section 21101, the analysis would be the same.) It is undisputed that the vehicle weight restrictions have only been implemented on roads within the City of Cerritos, which means that Vehicle Code section 35702 [relied upon by Norwalk] is not implicated.... Even if the vehicle weight restrictions have a regional impact, the restrictions are allowed by the express permission of the [state]. The law allows these restrictions.

The court did not allow Norwalk to amend its complaint, thereby ruling completely in Cerritos' favor.

DeSantis is wrong about Black studies

By Mark Whitaker

Mark Whitaker is a journalist and the author of "Saying It Loud: 1966 – The Year Black Power Challenged the Civil Rights Movement," which will be published on Feb. 7.

In the latest salvo in his war on "wokeness," Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis has announced support for a statewide ban on a new Advanced Placement class on African American studies that will be officially unveiled this week at a ceremony in Washington, D.C. In defending the ban, DeSantis (R) and his allies at Florida's Department of Education relied on a draft framework for the curriculum, and cherry-picked from roughly a hundred proposed topics to object to a handful of buzzwords, including "reparations" and "intersectionality," as well as Black feminism and Black queer activism. "We want education, not indoctrination," DeSantis declared.

DeSantis's attack on this new high school curriculum is an extension of a bill he signed into state law last year called the Stop Wrongs to Our Kids and Employees Act. This provocatively entitled "Stop WOKE" Act prohibits Florida schools from teaching history in any way that generalizes about what members of one racial group have done to members of another racial group in the past. "No one should be instructed to feel as if they are not equal or shamed because of their race," DeSantis said at that signing, turning language that once might have applied to minorities on its head to signal to today's White students and their parents that they shouldn't be made to feel bad about anything their ancestors did to Black people.

Although DeSantis and his allies have insisted that they are not against teaching "the history of African Americans," their rhetoric suggests that they are hostile to the idea of treating Black studies as a separate field of study, and that they believe it serves only to turn impressionable young people of different backgrounds against one another. "These dangerous concepts seek to divide Americans, rather than unite them," said Richard Corcoran, Florida's commissioner of education, when the Stop WOKE Act was passed.

Yet, as I discovered in reporting a book about the pivotal year in Black history that was 1966, when the push for Black studies began at what is now San Francisco State University, the original advocates of this idea had something very different in mind. At the time, their focus was on encouraging Black people themselves to understand and celebrate their role in the American story — and thus to feel a greater stake in American citizenry at a time of intense racial turmoil. If the AP curriculum that has grown out of that movement seems more designed to tell that story than to reassure White students, that's no accident. But teenagers of all races can benefit from the wider understanding of our history that Black studies have helped foster.

In addition to the dawn of Black studies, 1966 saw an extraordinary flowering of "Black consciousness" on other fronts. Firebrand Stokely Carmichael displaced future congressman John Lewis as chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and popularized the slogan "Black Power!" Huey Newton and Bobby Seale formed the Black Panther Party for Self-Defense in Oakland, Calif., with its trademark berets and leather jackets. Afros and dashikis sprouted, and the first Kwanzaa was celebrated.

But, at a deeper level, the Black Power movement was just the latest manifestation of a "nationalist" strain in African American history that stretched back for more than a century, to the days of Marcus Garvey and before. The key difference was that Garvey and previous nationalist leaders believed that the only answer to the miserable condition of Black people in America was to seek a separate homeland elsewhere. By contrast, the Black Power generation embraced the idea of a new culture that would allow Black people to feel a greater sense of pride and heritage while staying put in the United States.

Malcolm X, who remained a hero to Black Power leaders even after his assassination in 1965, was the foremost proponent of this philosophy. Born Malcolm Little, he was the son of Garvey followers who traveled the country during his early childhood spreading the idea of a Black exodus to a new home in Africa or the Caribbean. But Malcolm himself came to believe that nationalism was a psychological, not a geographical, condition.

After Malcolm was killed, the Black Beat poet LeRoi Jones moved from Greenwich Village to Harlem, founded the Black Arts Movement, changed his name to Amiri Baraka, and was then invited to San Francisco to help pioneer that first Black studies curriculum. In an influential essay, Baraka credited Malcolm with the idea that no matter where they were, "Black People are a race, a culture, a Nation ... Our land is where we live."

In the winter of 1966, a Black Texas native named Jimmy Garrett enrolled in what was then San Francisco State College. Already 23, Garrett had been a Freedom Rider and a fundraiser for SNCC in Los Angeles, where he sought support from Hollywood liberals such as Jane Fonda, Marlon Brando and Elizabeth Taylor. Now, he was determined to win a bet with a fellow SNCC organizer that he could form a Black student union on a predominantly White campus. When he circulated a manifesto entitled "Justification for Black Studies," Garrett recalled, it was at first a bid to foster "collective consciousness" among a tiny Black student population that at the time was balkanized between jocks, wonks, and fraternity and sorority types.

With the rise of Black Power in 1966 also came a White political backlash that helped elect Ronald Reagan governor of California and propelled a rightward swing in midterm voting that set the stage for Richard M. Nixon's presidential run two years later. As that backlash grew uglier, Eugene Genovese, a well-known White scholar of American slavery, predicted that the study of Black history would provide a refuge for Black people on campus who might otherwise turn to violence, answering calls to armed revolution from the likes of Eldridge Cleaver of the Black Panthers. "We may expect to arrive, therefore, at a new view of Afro-American history, whatever the political outcome of the present turmoil," Genovese wrote in a prominent academic journal. A half-century later, most states have accepted the value of teaching some African American history, and Florida's constitution even requires it. So why the attack on this AP course? DeSantis told reporters that it was because the proposed curriculum promotes a far-left "agenda" without presenting opposing views. A quick scan of the draft framework shows otherwise. On its last page, the framework recommends 25 books and texts that have achieved a "strong consensus" among educators as essential to the African American studies canon, including such classics as "The Souls of Black Folk" by W.E.B. Du Bois and Martin Luther King Jr.'s "Letter From a Birmingham Jail."

But the top 25 list also includes a 1926 essay called "The Negro Art Hokum" by George Schuyler, a longtime conservative columnist for the Pittsburgh Courier, a widely read Black newspaper, blasting the idea that African American art was different from any other kind of art as "self-evident foolishness." Why did the scores of eminent scholars and veteran teachers involved in vetting the AP course recommend Schuyler's essay, which reads as decidedly un-woke today? Clearly, they wanted to expose students to different points of view and stimulate classroom debate.

Among the contemporary Black scholars singled out as unacceptable by the Florida critics was Leslie Kay Jones, a Rutgers University sociologist who has argued that Black people provide vast amounts of free content to Twitter and Facebook without reflecting on the role those platforms might play in perpetuating a white supremacist "superstructure." Reached for comment by the Associated Press, Jones said she assumed that any good high school teacher would use her writing as a jumping off point to encourage students "to come to their own conclusions through an evaluation of primary and secondary texts." As Jones put it, "Is Ron DeSantis claiming that Florida students are unable to formulate their own opinions?"

A skeptic would say that DeSantis actually doesn't care about the educational arguments and is simply grandstanding to get attention and support for an expected presidential run. But far more than transitory politics is at stake. In America, teaching history in high school has long been seen as having not just an educational but a deeper civic purpose. DeSantis seems to be playing to his political base by harking back to a day when that meant offering students a one-size-fits-all, uplifting national story dominated by the noble deeds of great White men. But as far back as the 1960s, members of the Black Power generation announced they were no longer accepting that sanitized narrative, and since then they have been joined by millions of young women and members of other ethnic and LGBTQ communities.

In today's world, preserving a sense of shared American identity requires allowing young people to understand our history in all its complexity. If Florida officials were wise, they would realize that means helping students of all backgrounds see themselves in our past, so they can better envision themselves in our future.

How ideological foes united on ideas for amending the Constitution

By Jeffrey Rosen and Sal Khan

Jeffrey Rosen is president and CEO of the National Constitution Center. Sal Khan is CEO of Khan Academy. They are creating a free online course focused on the Constitution and its history.

Political polarization, the conventional wisdom goes, has made our Constitution unamendable. The supermajorities required to propose and ratify constitutional amendments — two-thirds in both houses of Congress plus three-fourths of the states — are now unobtainable. As a result, as Jill Lepore reported in the New Yorker, the United States has one of the lowest amendment rates in the world. citizenship requirement for the presidency. If the amendment passed, Henry Kissinger and Arnold Schwarzenegger could run for president.

The 29th Amendment would allow for legislative vetoes of executive and regulatory actions. All three teams shared concerns about an imperial presidency and a runaway administrative state, typically a conservative and libertarian bugaboo. And they all found a solution in resurrecting the legislative veto, which allows Congress to negate executive actions by majority vote. Congress exercised this power from 1932 until the Supreme Court struck it down in 1983, a decision that the delegates' amendment would overrule.

future amendments a little easier. Congress could propose amendments by a three-fifths vote of both Houses (down from two-thirds), and amendments would become law when ratified by two-thirds of the states (down from three-fourths). The delegates also added an alternative, population-based amendment track, so that small states couldn't block overwhelming majorities from changing the Constitution. On this other track, states representing two-thirds of the national population could force Congress to propose amendments, and states representing three-fourths of the population could call a Constitutional Convention themselves. And all proposed amendments would go into effect if ratified by states representing three-fourths of the population.

And yet, there might be more agreement on constitutional change than meets the eye.

That's the surprising lesson that emerged from a virtual convention of conservative, progressive and libertarian legal scholars organized by the National Constitution Center.

It began when we convened three teams of well-known law professors — conservative, libertarian and progressive — to draft new constitutions from scratch. All three teams converged around basic reforms, including the need to strengthen congressional oversight of the president and to increase Congress's control over federal spending and regulations.

Encouraged by this consensus, the three teams gathered together for a Zoom convention in August to see if they could agree on specific amendments to the existing Constitution.

And after a week of dialogue, deliberation and compromise, the ideologically diverse delegates agreed on proposals for five pathbreaking amendments:

The 28th Amendment would eliminate the natural-born

The 30th Amendment would seek to avoid partisan impeachments while making it easier to remove dangerous presidents. It would reform the presidential impeachment process by replacing "Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors" as cause for impeachment with "serious criminal acts, or for serious abuse of the public trust." In other words, not all crimes would be impeachable and not all impeachable conduct would be criminal. And while the current Constitution requires a majority of the House to impeach and two-thirds of the Senate to convict, the amendment would change both thresholds to threefifths, making it harder to impeach but easier to convict.

The 31st Amendment would set 18-year term limits for Supreme Court justices, with staggered terms allowing for a vacancy every two years. Thus each president would get to appoint two Supreme Court justices per four-year term, regularizing and de-politicizing the Supreme Court confirmation process. It would also require the Senate to vote on all nominees. (In other words, no ignoring Merrick Garland.) If a sitting justice died or left the court, the president would nominate a successor to fill out the end of that term.

The 32nd Amendment would make proposing and ratifying

What unites all five amendments is a focus on the structures of government rather than individual rights. By preventing all power from being concentrated in one place, all are designed to ensure that each of the three branches can check the others or that all three branches are ultimately responsible to the people.

Watching the delegates deliberate so thoughtfully felt like watching modern-day founders. And sustaining the whole project was the spirit of compromise. No delegates got their ideal solutions, but they did get solutions that were better than the status quo. Their training in constitutional history and law was key to helping the delegates focus on long-term consequences rather than immediate partisan advantage.

The delegates to the virtual convention hope to present their five amendments to Congress and start the process of building the support necessary to ratify them. Whether or not they succeed, they have already shown us there is more that unites Americans when it comes to the Constitution than our broken political system suggests.

Democrats have a spending problem

By Betsy McCaughey

The average American home is almost 2,200 square feet. An average home in the United Kingdom is a minuscule 818 square feet, in Finland 880 square feet and in Germany under 1,200 square feet. Cramped. Americans have bigger houses and a higher material standard of living — more appliances, clothing and cars — largely because they can keep more of what they earn. The U.S. is a low-tax nation — for now.

Europeans, in comparison, have to fork over much more of their earnings to the government. They enjoy paid maternity leave, free health care, nearly free college and many other government benefits. But they settle for a lower standard of living.

Are Americans willing to settle for less, too? As Washington politicians fight over the debt ceiling and whether to limit government spending, the real issue is whether Americans are ready to pay more taxes and have less spending money in order to finance European-style government benefits.

In the U.S., two-thirds of the nation's gross domestic product is spent on things people want for themselves — cars, computers, housing, furniture, vacations, you name it. In Europe, only 50% goes for these things. Government sucks up the other half.

Workers in Europe spend half the workday toiling to prop up their government's socialistic programs.

Advocates for a liberal welfare state slam our materialistic lifestyles — our giant refrigerators with built-in ice machines, and in-sink garbage disposals. Bloomberg columnist Allison Schrager deplores Americans' "overconsumption" and argues we should learn to live like Europeans. That's her opinion.

Americans who disagree, and don't want to trade their takehome pay for cradle-to-grave benefits, need to speak up.

Democratic politicians won't admit there's a trade-off. They want you to believe taxing "the rich" will pay for big government programs without taking a dollar out of your pocket.

President Joe Biden told Steamfitters Local 602 last week: "As long as I'm president, no one making less than $400,000 will have a single penny of their taxes raised. Period."

That's the Democrats' script. They're hawking magic. There aren't enough rich people to pay for all the programs Biden Democrats are pushing.

Manhattan Institute economist Brian Riedl added up all the extra revenue that would be produced by Rep. Alexandra Ocasio-Cortez's proposed 70% tax on income over $10 million, plus Sen. Elizabeth Warren's proposed corporate tax rate hikes and payroll tax hikes, and Sen. Bernie Sanders' wealth and estate tax measures. Together, these soak-the-rich proposals can't close the current budget deficit, much less finance the Biden nanny state agenda.

Paying for that agenda would actually require draining the middle class. "If America wants to spend like Europe, it must tax like Europe — and that means large payroll and value-added taxes on the middle class," says Riedl.

That brings us to the drama in Washington, D.C., over House Republican demands that any debt ceiling hike be linked to future limits on government spending. Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer opposes any conditions, bashing Republicans for "hostage-taking."

But Schumer's out of touch. A staggering 86% of registered voters polled say Democrats should agree to negotiate, including 44% from Schumer's party. Fifty-eight percent of voters say the Biden administration has been "reckless and loose" with people's money, including 44% of Democrats, according to the same Harvard/Harris poll.

Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen claims raising the debt ceiling should be automatic: "This is something you can't negotiate or bargain about." That's B.S. History proves that the expiration of the debt ceiling, which happens every year or two, is the biggest opportunity to rein in Washington spendaholics.

Over the last 25 years, Congress has hammered out eight laws to control spending. All eight were tied to debt ceiling hikes.

At stake in this current debt ceiling struggle is preserving what sets the United States apart from Europe.

In the United States, working people get to keep most of what they earn and decide how to spend it.

Don't let the Washington polls treat your paycheck as if it belongs to them.

Downey Councilwoman recalled in landslide vote

■ The embattled Councilwoman Catherine Alvarez's term will be cut short after Tuesday's vote.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY - In Downey's first recall election in city history, Councilwoman Catherine Alvarez was successfully ousted from office by the voters of District 3.

Early results from the Los Angeles County Registrar's office showed Alvarez overwhelmingly behind in the polls, with over 2,900 (over 90%) votes for her removal.

At the time of writing, Alvarez had only mustered 318 votes in favor of her retention.

Alvarez did not respond to a Downey Patriot email asking for comment, however appeared to concede her defeat in a statement Tuesday evening, pinning blame against "Downey landlords" as she has for the last several months.

"Tonight, I was recalled because stood up against the Downey landlords," she wrote. "They have been getting more aggressive about evicting tenants. And now, they got their wish to evict the only tenant on the Downey City Council. They want zero representation for working class families."

Alvarez's statement was first reported by the Press Telegram.

Despite her claims, proponents of the recall maintained throughout their campaign that they sought to recall Alvarez because they felt she had "deceived Downey voters" when she ran for office in 2020 by not disclosing her prior criminal history.

"This recall was about fairness and accountability," they said in a statement sent to the Patriot Tuesday evening. "Voters deserve to know if a candidate has been arrested, and in this case, Catherine

Even after taking office, Alvarez showed no inclination of a desire to change. She was cited by Code Enforcement after her son was found living on the floor of a utility room closet in her apartment building. Alvarez also voted against a Code of Ethics for the city council and said the American flag 'brings her pain.'

Supporters of the recall included former Mayors Rick Rodriguez, Mario A. Guerra, Alex Saab, and current mayor Claudia Frometa. The recall was organized and driven entirely by District 3 residents.

This week's election marks a significant day for Downey. It's a turning point for our community, the start of restoring character and decency to the city council. Residents may not always agree on policies and ideas, but we stand united in agreement that our elected representatives should be honest, somebody that is not fit for office,
