Planning Commission approves apartment complex

• After careful revision, the Norwalk Planning Commission approved the Alondra Maidstone Mixed Use project.

By Vincent Medina Contributor

NORWALK - Approval of the Alondra Maidstone Mixed Use project was confirmed by the city Planning Commission Wednesday evening.

The project, which consists of 209 apartments at the former location of the Norwalk swap meet, was sent back for review on Jan.11 so city staff could address parking accommodations and concerns.

Shapell Properties Inc. and city staff added 11 stalls making the total parking space 421, according to the staff report. They also created an additional 19 parking spots that assured the commission and could be built on the street, 15 on Norwalk residents that traffic in the the east and four on the west.

Doug Griffith, the vice president of development for Shapell Properties, explained additional Alondra at Maidstone as well as changes to the complex.

"We managed to make some parking stalls from areas that were landscaping," Griffith said. "We heard the request to create more parking and we wanted to maximize that request."

During public comments, community members, who did not give their full names, expressed concerns about traffic in the area, as Cerritos College and Excelsior Adult School are nearby. The construction of the Sprouts grocery store created a traffic concern as well.

Traffic engineer Shirva Briggs area would not become an issue.

"We prepared the traffic study and evaluated the intersection of the laundrette on Pioneer blvd,' Briggs said. "We identified that the intersection with the existing configuration would operate within an acceptable level of service."

Public safety director Ozzie Ramos encouraged the commission to conduct outreach to residents in the vicinity to make them aware of the new parking situation.

Allow me to put in a plug for the American Red Cross and for donating blood. Every day, blood donors help people of all ages: accident and burn victims, heart surgery and organ transplant patients, and those battling cancer and other conditions that lead to anemia.

If you happen to be reading this online, treat yourself to a one-minute Red Cross promo, a wonderful tribute to Neve Campbell and to the horror movie genre.

Current blood shortages are leading to delays for those in need. Did you know that:

The only source of blood and platelets is from volunteers. It cannot be manufactured.

Every two seconds someone in this country needs blood or platelets, and some 29,000 units of red blood cells, 5,000 units of platelets, and 6,500 units of plasma are needed every day.

Sickle cell disease affects around 100,000 people in this country alone, and some of them will need blood transfusions throughout their lives.

A single car accident victim can require as many as 100 units of blood.

The most common blood type requested is type O. However, there is always a need for A positive, A negative, B positive, O positive, AB positive and AB negative, and platelets, as well.

A single donation can save more than one life.

While blood donors don't expect to be rewarded, there are some surprising health benefits!

When you donate, you get a free mini-physical. Your vital signs are checked, including blood pressure, pulse, heart rhythm, and you can find out your blood type. You are also screened for a number of infectious diseases.

• Donating regularly is linked to lower blood pressure and a lower risk of heart attack. Giving blood lowers blood viscosity, which reduces the chances of forming blood clots.

Altruism and volunteering have been linked to positive health outcomes, including a lower risk for depression and greater longevity. Giving blood is a way of being engaged in your community, and helping those around you.

• Finally, about 500 calories will need to be replenished – so, the juice and cookies you are offered afterwards become a zerocalorie snack!

Perhaps this column will encourage you to contact the American Red Cross at RedCross.org, and donate blood. You truly can save a life!

With February recognized across the nation as American Heart health Month, it's important to understand the leading causes of heart disease.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), heart disease is the leading cause of death among men, women and people of most racial and ethnic groups in the United States. It's important to recognize what you can do to live a lifestyle that promotes good heart health, prevents illnesses and possible death.

"We all should know the do's and don'ts when it comes to understanding what good heart health is all about," said Dr. Columbus Batiste, regional chief of cardiology at Kaiser Permanente Southern California. "And for most people, it only takes a few steps to prevent heart disease, including choices when it comes to diet and lifestyle that have a great impact on one's health."

Julia Patterson, 72, is a perfect example of what lifestyle changes can do to help your heart become stronger and healthier.

When Patterson was diagnosed with an irregular heartbeat, she soon realized she had to make a choice: along with medication, begin eating a healthier diet with more fruits and vegetables and exercise regularly, or risk her heart condition deteriorating with potentially dangerous consequences. She chose the first option.

"I lost weight and began feeling more energized," Patterson explained. "I was taking my health for granted. Now, I feel better, I don't get tired as easily, my heart feels stronger, life is less stressful, and I'm more positive in general. Changing my lifestyle made all the difference!'

Patterson is not alone when it comes to the prevalence of Americans suffering from heart conditions. Consider these facts from the CDC:

Adopt a healthy lifestyle to keep your heart healthy and strong

About 659,000 people in the United States die from heart disease each year - that's 1 in every 5 deaths in 2020.

High blood pressure, high blood cholesterol and smoking are key risk factors for heart disease. Several other medical conditions and lifestyle choices such as diet, exercise and diabetes also are contributing factors.

Dr. Batiste offers the following advice to keep your heart healthy:

Eat right for your heart

Heart-healthy food like fruits, vegetables, increased healthy plant proteins and whole grains will help keep your heart and blood vessels in good shape.

Get your heart pumping

It's recommended that you engage in 150 minutes of exercise a week, or at least 30 minutes of moderate exercise on most days. If you can't do all 30 minutes at once, do 10 minutes at a time. Brisk walking, swimming or cycling are especially good for the heart, but choose any activity you enjoy. Start at your comfort level and build up gradually. It's always wise to check with your doctor before starting a new exercise program.

Maintain healthy weight

Lowering your weight by just 10 percent can make a significant difference in reducing your risk of heart disease. If you need to lose weight, learn ways to change your eating habits and be more physically active.

De-stress your life.

Stress, anger, anxiety and depression may keep your blood pressure high and increase your risk of heart attack, stroke and other illnesses.

If you smoke, now's the time to quit

Smoking is bad for your health and is a leading cause of heart disease and death. It's never too late to quit

If you drink alcohol, drink in moderation

Drinking too much alcohol can raise your total cholesterol levels and your blood pressure. Limit alcohol to no more than one drink a day for women, or two drinks a day for men. A drink equals:

12 ounces of beer 5 ounces of wine

1 ounce of liquor

When to switch from a pediatrician to an adult doctor

Contributed by PIH Health

Pediatricians have special training in adolescent medicine. And adolescents have special medical needs, which is why many young adults are keeping their pediatricians a bit longer than one would think.

No one said it was easy to be a teenager, or the parent of one. Puberty is just the beginning of a series of physical and emotional changes that will impact your child's life. This is just one reason why many parents aren't in a hurry to transition their child to a new doctor during a time of so many other changes.

Your child's pediatrician is a valuable resource that knows and understands your child as you navigate through the growing pains of adolescence. Pediatricians also help provide a continuity of care that is essential to good health.

PIH Health Pediatrician, Sylvia Gonzalez MD says, "Teens and young adults have unique needs. If you transfer their care to adult medicine too early, it can become fragmented. This is why the best time to transition your child from a pediatric doctor to a primary care specialist is between ages 19-21."

Stop the political blame game and start cutting the debt

By Joe Manchin

Joe Manchin, a Democrat, represents West Virginia in the U.S. Senate.

From a once-in-a-century pandemic and inflation not seen in decades to a global energy crisis, it is fair to say the American people are "crisis-ed out."

Given all that anxiety, one would presume that leaders of both parties would seek out compromise to avert an unnecessary, entirely avoidable financial crisis and act soon to raise the debt ceiling.

Instead, we are again witnessing a dangerous game of unnecessary brinkmanship that puts our global credit rating at risk and could cost American families and businesses much more if our leaders fail.

How serious a crisis could we face if we continue to ignore our nation's debt? Consider the words of the then-chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. Mike Mullen, who was asked in February 2011 about the greatest threat facing our nation when he appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee. Without skipping a beat, Mullen said it was our national debt. Those words are truer now than they were then.

Here are the facts: Our national debt was $14.1 trillion in February 2011. In the decade since, we have added nearly another $20 trillion to that total with bipartisan enthusiasm. That's over $94,000 for every American.

Never in the history of our nation have we so quickly amassed so much debt. Several presidents and both parties played a role in getting us here. While I am proud that the Inflation Reduction Act last year directed $300 billion to deficit reduction — the largest down payment in decades — we must do more.

Democrats and Republicans seem to want to blame each other rather than come to grips with the reality that we must raise the debt limit and rein in the out-of-control spending that threatens Social Security, Medicare and our national defense.

How can this be done?

Congress could start by doing its job and crafting a bipartisan budget agreement that puts our country on a better path. By just passing the annual appropriations bills on time, we would save billions we currently waste year after year by relying on continuing resolutions to fund government operations.

Capping the annual growth of discretionary spending at 1 percent for the next 10 years would save more than $1 trillion. We can do this without threatening essential programs such as Medicare and Social Security or cutting defense spending at a time when we are grappling with the largest-scale land war in Europe since World War II and an emboldened China that blatantly violates our airspace and dominates global supply chains.

These are just a few ideas, and no doubt there are others that might prove more viable — if we choose to simply pause and listen to each other.

Fortunately, history shows that progress is possible and that divided government can produce results. Between 1985 and 1997, Congress enacted multiple, mostly bipartisan, reforms that led to a balanced budget in 1998 for the first time in decades.

It will not be easy, but now is the time for President Biden and our congressional leaders to come together and have an honest, open and public discussion about what we can and must do in the best interest of our nation. Failure is not an option.

Regardless of our party affiliation, we all have a responsibility to rise above the politics of the moment — especially during times like these. And when it comes to an issue as serious as the national debt, I am guided by the words of my grandfather, who liked to say, "Unmanaged debt will lead you to make cowardly decisions."

Those words stuck with me as I grew older, got married, started a family, built my own small business and went into public service. As governor of West Virginia, I held weekly budget meetings to ensure our government was living within its means, just like every family around every kitchen table across America. With our debt now standing at $31.4 trillion, we as elected leaders must have the courage to work together and act. Because, make no mistake, the American people will bear the ultimate consequences of our inaction if we allow politics to rule the day.

Severely understaffed hospitals shouldn't be buying Super Bowl ads

By Farzon A. Nahvi

Farzon A. Nahvi is an emergency medicine physician and the author of "Code Gray: Death, Life, and Uncertainty in the ER."

For many health-care workers watching the Super Bowl in recent years, the hardest hits have often come not during gameplay but in the commercial breaks.

Emergency rooms across the country have become chronically overcrowded and understaffed. Hospitals often claim they don't have the funds to hire more employees to meet the urgent needs of patients. Yet in between Super Bowl advertisements for Flamin' Hot Cheetos and Bud Light Seltzer Hard Soda, it's now commonplace to see commercials for institutions such as the University of Rochester Medical Center, NYU Langone Health and Inspira Health.

To understand why this situation is so troublesome, we must first appreciate the stakes: Hospital crowding, which gets worse when institutions are understaffed, is a national problem — and a deadly one. Multiple studies have demonstrated that overcrowding is directly associated with an increase in patient mortality.

To make matters worse, a 2016 report by the American College of Emergency Physicians found that over 90 percent of American emergency rooms are routinely crowded; that number has only increased since then. If you've been to an emergency room recently, the overwhelming odds are that it was packed. As a result, your wringing "more work out of fewer employees." Indeed, hospital administrators often measure success by determining how much they can lower operating expenses by reducing the number of "employees per occupied bed." In other words, low staffing levels are not a result of the coronavirus pandemic, staff burnout or a tight labor market — they are a business model.

Simultaneously, as hospitals save money by cutting staffing, hospital marketing budgets have skyrocketed. According to a report in the Journal of the American Medical Association, between 2004 and 2016, direct-to-consumer advertising by hospitals and healthcare systems jumped 74 percent to $1.4 billion per year.

A brief stroll through New York City reveals billboards in Times Square, posters on bus stops and in subway stations, illuminated signs on city taxis, and newsstands full of magazines flush with advertisements for local hospitals. Prime-time TV slots feature ads from cancer centers and children's hospitals. And beyond simply advertising during the Super Bowl, health-care systems have become official corporate partners of the Super Bowl.

As hospitals invest liberally in marketing while tightening their wallets when it comes to bedside patient care, it's hard to view the billions spent on ads as anything other than waste.

Many hospital executives would say that deciding whether to spend on advertising or patient care presents a false choice. They would insist that marketing is a necessary operating expense that a modern hospital must invest in to succeed. This argument is often referred to as "no margin, no mission" — a shorthand way of saying that for a hospital to perform good work, it must first generate the money with which to do so.

it really be argued that spending on television commercials remains a necessity?

If spending on advertisements is nonnegotiable but hiring enough nurses to save patients' lives isn't, who is our health-care system truly serving? At what point can it be said that this system has lost its way and the margin has, in fact, become the mission?

Legislators in several states, including Massachusetts, Oregon and Washington, are trying to rectify the situation by considering legislation that would mandate safe staffing ratios. Predictably, hospital lobbying organizations say they "strongly oppose" these legislative attempts, citing the "financial burden" of higher operating costs that such laws would impose.

In light of these claims, these bills should go a step further. They should also ban hospitals from engaging in costly direct-toconsumer advertising. What better way to save billions of dollars to offset the "financial burden" of hiring more lifesaving medical personnel?

The Super Bowl provides us with a clarifying lens. It is American television's most watched event and its most expensive airtime, and the very idea of hospitals advertising during the game is symbolic. It heralds an era when it's no longer unusual for enormous amounts of money to be frivolously spent faster than a single touchdown play, while at the same time nurses are going on strike to demand safe chances of dying were higher than they should have been.

Given what's at stake, one would assume that hospitals would invest in a solution: If they were to simply hire more staff, the ratio of patients to nurses and doctors would be lowered — and lives would be saved.

But hospitals have been doing the opposite.

A recent investigation by the New York Times revealed that many American hospitals have spent years pursuing an "industrywide movement" of keeping labor costs low by On the surface, this argument seems reasonable. But when hospital wings are closing because of staffing shortages, nurses are being asked to attend to more than four to five times the patients they can safely care for, and firefighters and the National Guard are stepping in to provide what hospitals themselves are failing to, can staffing levels for their patients.

So when people see any TV commercial or billboard highlighting a hospital system's quality of care, then walk into that same hospital system's emergency room only to find it dangerously overcrowded and understaffed, it is worth connecting the dots. Imagine how many lives would be saved if only we were to take the bold step of demanding that our health-care dollars be spent on actual health care.

China's not alone in spying on us

By Arthur Holland Michel

Arthur Holland Michel, a senior fellow at Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs and co-founder of the Center for the Study of the Drone at Bard College, is the author of "Eyes in the Sky: The Secret Rise of Gorgon Stare and How It Will Watch Us All."

If the Chinese stratospheric balloon spotted floating about a dozen miles above the northern United States is indeed a spy craft, as the Pentagon claims, it's hard to believe that it was meant to chart its course in secrecy. After all, it's a giant balloon. If anything, it was more likely dispatched precisely for the purpose of being seen.

As U.S. officials were quick to note on Thursday, the balloon is unlikely to have gathered any novel intelligence that China couldn't already have accessed by other means. Yet the balloon has captured something just as precious: our attention.

This makes the incident an important lesson about both the power and increasing pervasiveness of aerial surveillance technology.

Things that watch us from the sky are frightening. Balloons, drones, satellites and spy planes all inspire a primal sense of helplessness. If you know that something up there may be watching you, something perhaps so high or so small that you cannot see it for yourself, it's easy to fear that your every move could be tracked.

This effect can be so profound as to linger even when nothing's up there. Next time Americans see an unfamiliar speck in the sky, they'll be much more likely to think it's another Chinese incursion — even if it's merely the twinkle of a planet or an errant birthday balloon.

So even if the balloon's tactical value was nominal, its psychological impact has been significant. It perhaps adds some insult to injury that America's airspace — and, by extension, its collective sense of security — was pierced by a lumbering sack of gas traveling no faster than a sturdy wind.

This has been by no means an isolated incursion, however. It is becoming more and more likely that any specks seen in the sky are, in fact, something that spies on you. Other methods of watching from above, especially drones, are becoming cheaper and more easily available, and there's a strong probability that U.S. competitors have already dispatched them to snoop into America's backyard.

In recent years, for instance, small uncrewed aircraft have been spotted with spooky consistency near sensitive military facilities and assets. As have dozens of "unidentified aerial phenomena." Though these sightings have yet to be pinned to a culprit, Chinese spooks are thought to be high on the list of suspects.

More broadly, the Pentagon's claim that the balloon probably did not collect any novel intelligence speaks to the sad reality that our sense of being perpetually watched from above is well grounded. In recent years, Earth imaging satellites have been launched into orbit over our heads in astonishing numbers, both by governments — including China, which launched four sets of Yaogan Earth observation satellites in 2022 alone — and a growing cadre of commercial companies such as BlackSky and Planet Labs. Whereas a decade ago most places on Earth would have been overflown by a surveillance satellite only every few days or weeks, now, for many of us, it might never be more than a few hours since something has snapped a picture over our heads.

Nor is it solely the prying digital eyes of nefarious foreign balloons and spy sats that the public ought to be concerned about. In the past decade, aerial surveillance has quietly become a common practice among domestic police agencies at every level of government.

Federal law enforcement runs an impressive fleet of spy planes, some of which are operated by secretive shell companies that make it difficult to know precisely their number or what purpose they serve. Meanwhile, drones, mostly of the small, commercial variety, have been acquired by hundreds of local police forces.

Balloons might join these burgeoning aerial arsenals. The Pentagon has of late taken an intense interest in stratospheric balloons that can loiter in one spot for extended periods. It would come as no surprise if these, too, were to someday fall into the hands of domestic police agencies. Then, we would have all the more reason to duck for the cover at the sight of a speck in the sky.

• His employment contract still needs approval by the City Council on Tuesday.

By Eric Pierce Editor

DOWNEY - Roger Bradley has been selected to become Downey's next city manager, capping an eight-month search that began last summer.

Bradley currently serves as assistant city manager of Corona, where he oversees the city's public works, planning and community services departments.

He previously served as community services director for Claremont and assistant county administrative officer for Kings County

"Roger Bradley impressed us with his strong local government issued by the city of Downey, background, commitment to customer service, his thoughtful approach to leadership and in his insightful analysis of Downey's future needs," Mayor Claudia the Sol Price School of Public Policy Frometa said in a statement.

Bradley's employment contract is still being finalized and is four children.

expected to be approved by the City Council on Feb. 14.

Bradley replaces Gilbert Livas, who was forced into retirement last July.

According to a news release Bradley graduated from Brigham Young University with degrees in Political Science and Statistics, and he earned a master's degree from at USC.

He and his wife, Jennifer, have embark upon this new and beautiful journey together. As the great poet Federico García Lorca said: `Every step we take on earth brings us to a new world.'

"I gaze with joy and excitement at the world that lies before me in New York City," he said.

Dudamel has previously conducted 26 concerts with the New York Philharmonic, dating back to 2007. He will conduct three performances in New York May 19-21 of Mahler's Symphony No. 9, according to the NY Phil.

"This is a dream come true for our musicians, our audience, and certainly for me," NY Phil President/CEO Deborah Borda said in a statement. "The coming together of a great orchestra, a visionary music and artistic director, and our transformed hall promises the richest of futures."

Dudamel, a Venezuela native, also currently serves as the music director of the Opéra National de Paris and Simón Bolívar Symphony Orchestra.

His flamboyant style as a conductor and passion for music is credited with leading a resurgence of the LA Phil and enhancing access to music for youth and underserved communities.

"Since he first took the stage at the Hollywood Bowl as the music and artistic director of the Los staged, inspiring the orchestra to reach new levels of artistry, expanding the limits of Walt Disney Concert Hall, and demonstrating the power of music to change people's lives through YOLA (Youth Orchestra Los Angeles), Gustavo has left indelible marks on classical music, the LA Phil and Los Angeles. We are deeply proud of what we have achieved, and will continue to, under his guidance.

"From our earliest days, the LA Phil has been a trailblazer, boldly embracing the new, welcoming the world's greatest artists to our stages and redefining the role of an orchestra in our community. The search for our next music director will be conducted with this same organization," Smith said.

Dudamel's personality led to him transcending the world of classical music, crossing into the "From programming some of world of Hollywood with voice roles the most ambitious works ever in the film "Trolls World Tour" and "The Simpsons," and appearances in the series "Mozart in the Jungle" and "Sesame Street."

> He conducted the score for Steven Spielberg's adaptation of "West Side Story," and also conducted the opening and closing credit scores for "Star Wars: The Force Awakens." He also led the LA Phil in a 2019 performance at the Academy Awards. In addition, Hollywood Walk of Fame in 2019. Dudamel conducted the LA Phil in performances with Christina Aguilera and Billie Eilish and Finneas.

Born Jan. 26, 1981, in Barquisimeto, Venezuela, the son of a trombonist and a singing teacher, Dudamel began reading scores by the time he was 10 years old.

Gustavo Dudamel

He is a product of "El Sistema," Venezuela's acclaimed youth program of immersive musical training. When he was 12, he was hired as an assistant conductor with the Amadeus Chamber Orchestra in Barquisimeto.

Dudamel won a Grammy in 2012 for best orchestral performance for conducting "Brahms: Symphony No. 4." In 2016, Dudamel became the first classical musician to participate in the Super Bowl halftime show, conducting members of Youth Orchestra Los Angeles.
