Norwalk Unides call for more community development funding

At Tuesday's council meeting, members from Norwalk Unides expressed their support for investing in community development.

By Vincent Medina Contributor

NORWALK- Members from the city activism group, Norwalk Unides, encouraged city council to invest in community development and social services projects as the council discussed the budget for the fiscal year.

The fiscal year 2022/23 city budget allocates the majority of the general fund revenues under the public safety and public services department.

At $23.1 million, the Public Safety department takes up approximately 35.7% of the city's general funds. The largest budget item in public safety is the sheriff's contract of $15.7 million.

The Public Services department takes up approximately 21.1% of the city's general funds with $13.7 million

Jana Stuard, Norwalk's director of finance, explained that revisions to the city budget would include the addition of converting three parttime public safety officers to fulltime. The revision to the budget would also include increasing hours for staff in the social services department.

Sylvester Ani, a member of Norwalk Unides, expressed his support for the additional funds for social services.

"I'd like to look into a guaranteed income as well," Ani said. "It's something that has been practiced in cities all over the country. Invest directly into families and they understand what they need and that provides more safety for people in bad situations "

During the meeting, the city council also discussed updating the housing element of the general plan, as required by state law.

The proposed changes included the production of new housing units, the preservation of existing affordable housing and the provision of resources and services Sylvester Ani and Norwalk Unides advocate for funding the Social Services Department and Community for homeless individuals and Development projects. Cervantes felt the Matadores took charge most of the way in the semifinal game.

In the game, the Matadores drained eight long-range baskets.

"I feel like we were very prepared with our coaching staff and controlled the whole game and felt like had the lead the whole game," he said. "Pretty much every team we play from now on they will be face-guarding Julien Gomez, so I knew how to be aggressive."

"Just to give the guys the chance to get back to the finals is great," said Murphy. "It gives us a chance to possibly win it.

The future is bright for the Matadores, as they are returning 11 players next year. "These kids don't play like they're sophomores," Oronoz said.

Paging Dr. Frischer...

By Dr. Alan Frischer

Many of us have had some exposure to virtual reality; perhaps through gaming, or in an escape room. VR is now finding a home in health care. Virtual reality technology allows us to simulate a situation or experience, and to interact in a computer-generated environment. It might use 3-D goggles with a screen, or gloves that provide sensory feedback, in order to help us learn from experience in a virtual world. Take a look at some of the evolving uses of VR in medicine:

Pain management: VR for pain control is one of the best-studied and mostused areas. VR has been used to reduce suffering from various sources of acute and chronic pain (including labor pain) by allowing patients to be distracted from their symptoms and from the fear related to the pain. For some, VR may offer a drug free alternative for pain control, which is especially relevant during this opioid crisis. It has provided an escape into the digital world for sick and injured children. Cedars Sinai has employed a "virtualist," who evaluates whether VR might be suitable for a patient, and then tailors a prescription for the technology.

Physical therapy:

VR has been effective in the treatment of stroke rehabilitation, Parkinson's disease, cerebral palsy, and injuries. Using motion enabled programs, VR can reproduce physical movements and provide motivation. Patients can virtually practice real-life skills, like grocery shopping or dishwashing, and receive immediate feedback. A local skilled care facility in Downey has used a virtual bowling game and other virtual sports to get their patients moving.

Physical fitness: VR has been used in a number of fitness apps to encourage physical activity by making it more fun. Apps provide goals and rewards, give feedback on movement, or simply make it more enjoyable by immersing the user in a beautiful environment. I recently ran on a treadmill which allowed me to select my virtual location, and I chose to take that day's run along the Merced River.

from the discomfort, anxiety, or boredom of treatments.

Addiction: VR can be useful in addiction recovery, using gradual exposure techniques alongside coaching. It uses a person's own environment to practice resisting their own common triggers, prior to encountering those triggers in the real world.

Memory and cognition: Studies show that VR can improve memory, cognitive, and motor function in patients with dementia.

Increasing empathy: Some hospitals use VR simulations to help health care providers better understand what their patients are going through. VR can simulate health conditions for ailments like dementia, Parkinson's disease, or a migraine.

Surgery prep: Prior to the operation, surgeons have access to 3D renderings of hearts, eyes, knee joints, and other body parts. Surgeons can use feedback gloves to mimic the buzzing of saws and drills.

Medical training: Current medical training has shifted from memorizing facts to imparting real-life skills, and includes problem-oriented learning and communication skills. Virtually any kind of medical situation can be simulated. This is followed by feedback and debriefing. The VR environment is more immersive, interactive, and engaging than many other educational formats, and it has the potential to profoundly change medical education.

The medical applications of VR continue to expand, as the technology is advancing quickly, costs are dropping, and devices are smaller, faster, more reliable, and more affordable. I will be paying close attention to see where this field takes us.

Family has two sets of "miracle twins" in 18 months

At Tuesday's council meeting, members from Norwalk Unides expressed their support for investmenting in community development.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

NORWALK - Compared to others, you could say that Norma and Daniel Salazar's family building has been a bit on the accelerated side.

The Norwalk couple met around 20 years ago working at the Downey Home Depot. In 2019, they would reconnect and start dating

"We were just kind of coworkers and friends, and kept in touch here and there," said Norma. "Then we reunited three years ago."

At the time, Norma was a single foster mother to a young boy. Around the time of the couples first date, that child would return to his family. Norma would later take in two sisters, which Daniel took in stride.

The couple married in 2020.

But children of their own didn't seem to be in the cards, as Norma suffered from PCOS; a hormonal condition which causes infertility.

At least, that's what they thought.

"We ended up getting married, and then we got pregnant," said Norma. "We didn't know what we were having or anything, but by that time, the girls, they told us they would be reunited back with their parents.'

It ended up being perfect timing, as Norma wasn't just pregnant; she was pregnant with twin girls.

Ramona and Camila were born in January 2021.

Considering Norma's condition, the fraternal twin sisters were already a happy surprise.

"We thought that was it," said Norma. "We were happy with our girls."

That is until nine months later when Norma discovered she was pregnant.

Again.

With twins.

Again.

"I thought [the girls] were miracles already...What were the odds that we were going to get pregnant," said Norma.

Daniel and David were born in July 2022. If you're keeping track, that's two sets of twins, four babies, in the span of about a year and a half.

"We were completely shocked.

We were overwhelmed, scared," said Norma.

Before the arrival of their boys, the family had gotten rid of most of their "twin stuff," except for their car seats.

Things have a funny way of working out though.

"Before we knew that we were having boys and twins, a woman was giving away diapers in Norwalk," said David. "When I got there, she said 'I have a bag of clothes, do you want them?' I said, 'Yeah, I'll take them and [Norma] will go through them.' We noticed when we were going through them, it was a lot of boy clothes for doubles.

"I said, 'imagine if we have twin boys; we already have all their clothes."

Naturally, there comes a lot of stress with having four young babies at home all at the same time. But Norma and David praise the support they've received from family and loved ones, and they wouldn't have things any other way.

Besides, there's plenty of joy to go around too.

"We get to see them grow," said David. "Our kids are all happy; Everyone always says they're happy and well behaved. When I'm at work, I want to come home and see them."

Norma says her children are "miracles."

"The doctors were saying I may not be able to [have kids]," said Norma. "So, to me, they're all a blessing and miracle from God, because that's the only way I can explain it."

Mental health: VR is used to address anxiety and trauma. Psychologists might, for example, treat someone traumatized by a car crash with virtual exposure therapy to public streets. VR has been used to treat fear of heights and other ailments and phobias, including depression and post-traumatic stress disorder. Some medical centers are using VR to help chemotherapy patients escape CA 90240.

The hottest restaurants should be the ones that care about their workers

By Robyn Tse

Robyn Tse has worked on both the culinary and the business sides of restaurants in New York, Copenhagen and Hong Kong.

I've seen a rise in diners' questions about food — whether ingredients are local, seasonal, organic, grass-fed, free-range or regeneratively farmed. At a restaurant where I used to work, a guest once asked me how many grams of sugar the cow that became her Wagyu beef dish was fed per day. Diners don't hesitate to ask about the welfare conditions of the pig that became their pork chop.

But what about the welfare of the people sourcing, cooking and serving that pork chop? Guests generally don't ask if the staff members get paid time off, sick leave or pay that's above minimum wage. (Often they get none of the above.) Diners certainly aren't asking about the number of people who cried in the walk-in fridge last week.

Perhaps people are afraid of broaching impolite topics while dining out. Or maybe they just don't know how — or what — to ask.

The abuse that runs rampant in high-end professional kitchens was long accepted as the price of excellence. What had been relegated to industry gossip broke through the front pages in 2017, when the #MeToo movement led to sexual harassment and assault allegations and eventual settlements involving influential restaurateurs like Ken Friedman and Mario Batali. Well-known institutions, including Eleven Madison Park and Willows Inn, were highlighted for being culinarily progressive but culturally regressive. Yet public attention fades quickly — and with little impetus for sustained change, the industry carries on with its tried and true recipes for success. Several of the implicated chefs, whom I used to look up to as role models, are already involved in new projects.

As part of my indoctrination into this industry, I trained as a young, unpaid intern at Noma, the fine-dining temple in Copenhagen. When I worked there in 2015, I dodged a few comments about my figure and a lecture on how having more women in the kitchen lowered the quality of the food. (A Noma representative said my experience "is not something we recognize, and we are deeply sorry to hear if this has been the experience for any of our team.") breast at another chef — I considered myself lucky to have emerged physically unscathed. Until this past fall, Noma continued to employ unpaid interns while charging $500 per head. After earning the No. 1 spot on the World's 50 Best Restaurants list five times, Noma recently announced that it was closing, amid rising criticism of its labor practices.

But after hearing worse tales from colleagues at other restaurants — including one who saw a head chef throw a duck

In a prior life, I worked for a shiny management consulting firm that announced its ranking on Glassdoor as proudly as some of my other culinary employers have touted their rankings on the World's 50 Best Restaurants list. In one world, I received quarterly performance reviews in the form of thoughtfully written evaluations with tactical feedback. In the other world, my performance was mostly evaluated in the form of verbal abuse. I can confirm that one method is far more effective at inspiring excellence than the other.

Fortunately, the public is beginning to shed its blinders. "Chef's Table," the Netflix show with its stunningly romantic homages to the pursuit of self-actualization through culinary craft has given way to recent hits like Hulu's "The Bear," which depicts the physically and mentally brutal realities of working in a restaurant, and the horror film "The Menu," which satirizes the elite's fanatical obsession with dishes that have been foraged, surgically tweezered and cooked to precision by miserably abused underlings. Even for those of us who don't treat hunting restaurant reservations as a sport, we must stomach the truth that we are supporting a certain type of work environment every time we decide where to dine.

Restaurant workers deserve a restaurant certification program that evaluates the quality of the workplace as critically as the quality of the ingredients — a more vigorous version of the restaurant sanitation letter grades established in many states. There should be a symbol for restaurants to display on their windows as proudly as they display their stars and reviews, a symbol that says: We care about our people, too.

A restaurant certification needs to mandate living wages as a bare minimum; the national subminimum hourly wage for tipped workers has been $2.13 since 1991. In the age of Covid, sick days should be nonnegotiable. The United States is the only developed country without guaranteed paid parental leave; employers must step in here, too. Since a majority of restaurant workers are women and many are people of color, sexual harassment and racial equity training with zero-tolerance policies are table stakes. There's also a business case to be made for better culture, of course. Hospitality is facing the most severe staffing crisis it has ever faced, worse than many other industries recovering from the pandemic. While some restaurants have turned to pizza-making and salad-tossing robots, the vast majority of restaurants have been struggling to hire actual humans. A resilient few have adapted, tentatively recognizing that higher wages and more benefits lead to higher retention rates and lower training costs.

Amanda Cohen now offers all employees at Dirt Candy in New York a starting wage of $25 per hour, and the Knead Hospitality + Design group, based in Washington, D.C., started testing a fourday workweek model. Starr Restaurants group even began offering signing bonuses to new hires. Audrey, a Nashville restaurant, offers mental health benefits to its employees, and Pujol in Mexico City and Cosme in New York, run by the Casamata group, provide leadership coaching for their general managers.

Such restaurants deserve our enthusiastic support and recognition — glowing reviews, generous tips, monthly reservations! You can also look for signs that indicate how much a restaurant values its team. Does the menu credit the chefs who developed the dish? Do its social media accounts highlight the individual contributions of team members? If you're about to splurge on a special meal or book a private event, don't hesitate to ask how long the team members have been working there or if they receive health insurance. If you leave a review online or rave to your friends about a meal, don't focus on just the food; also focus on how happy the servers seemed.

For far too long, we have been paying lower menu prices subsidized by labor abuse. Restaurants that instead charge more to reflect the true price of eating out should be embraced. But without a transparent certification program that accounts for compensation, health benefits, turnover rates, rigorous H.R. training and employee surveys, we cannot easily discern which restaurants are putting in the valuable work behind the scenes to build better cultures.

Whether as a diner, an employee or even an investor, we should feel confident when we walk up to a restaurant that high-quality work culture is a key ingredient. I promise the results will be delicious.

Can Biden legally cancel student debt? There's no question.

By George Miller

George Miller, a Democrat, represented California in the U.S. House from 1975 to 2015. He chaired the House Education Committee from 2007 to 2011.

In the Supreme Court case about challenges to President Biden's student debt relief plan, three Republican former representatives — former speaker John A. Boehner (Ohio), John Kline (Minn.) and Howard P. "Buck" McKeon (Calif.) — filed a brief telling the court that "Congress" never authorized the plan.

But they certainly don't speak for every member of Congress who voted for the law undergirding Biden's plan. their loan balances. By giving officials the authority to "waive" those requirements in connection with a national emergency, Congress empowered officials to say that those requirements no longer apply — that borrowers no longer need to pay off the debt they owe.

As I explain in my brief, this is how the federal government has used the word "waive" in other contexts and is consistent with how the Education Department and the courts have understood the secretary's waiver authority for decades.

And there's no question that the covid-19 pandemic is a

The Biden student debt relief plan achieves our goal of ensuring that student-aid recipients are not put in a worse position by a national emergency. As Education Secretary Miguel Cardona explained in an analysis submitted to the court, education officials determined that the debt-relief plan was necessary to ensure that borrowers would not default on their loans when pandemic-related payment pauses — in place since March 2020 — expired at the end of 2022. While experts might disagree on this analysis, it's the exact type of assessment that the Heroes Act empowers the education secretary to make.

Sure, Congress could have gone further by requiring the Education Department to relieve student debt. (In fact, as Boehner, McKeon and Kline noted in their brief, I pushed for this type of measure at one point, fearing that the department would not act fast enough on its own.) But instead, we gave education officials the flexibility to decide what waivers or modifications would best protect borrowers who were affected by national emergencies. Instead of constraining the education secretary's options, as my former colleagues argue, we deliberately kept those options open.

During my time in Congress, I co-sponsored the Heroes Act of 2003, as well as a 2007 law making the act permanent. As I explained in my own brief in the case, the student debt relief plan is clearly authorized by the Heroes Act. A look at the text and history of the law makes that clear.

The Heroes Act gives the education secretary the authority to "waive or modify any statutory or regulatory provision" regarding federal student-loan programs as he or she "deems necessary in connection with a . . . national emergency."

That language could hardly be clearer. "Statutory or regulatory provision[s]" regarding federal student-loan programs include the rules or regulations that would ordinarily require borrowers to pay

"national emergency" within the meaning of the law. The law specifically states that a "national emergency" includes any event declared by the president to be a national emergency. President Donald Trump declared covid-19 to be a "national emergency," and Biden has extended that national emergency declaration twice.

Why did we give the education secretary this authority? We wanted to make sure that federal student-aid recipients who are affected by national emergencies "are not placed in a worse position financially in relation to that financial assistance" because of the emergency. And we thought the education secretary would be in the best position to determine how best to effectuate that goal. As a 2003 House of Representatives report stated, we wanted to provide the secretary with "flexibility" and "the authority to implement waivers deemed necessary and not yet contemplated."

The Supreme Court should respect the law that Congress passed and the authority that it gives the education secretary. To reach that result, the court doesn't need to address the debate among former lawmakers about what Congress "intended." It should look no further than the text of the law that my colleagues and I passed.

To solve our national immigration crisis, let states sponsor immigrants

By Eric Holcomb and Spencer Cox

Eric Holcomb, a Republican, is governor of Indiana. Spencer Cox, a Republican, is governor of Utah.

Indiana has about 220,000 open jobs right now and Utah has 107,000, according to the most recent federal data — more than 6 percent of all jobs in both states. With strong business and tax environments, we like our chances in the competition for jobseekers moving from other states. But they won't be enough to fill all of those vacancies. We also need immigrants who are ready to work and help build strong communities.

To help us do our jobs as governors, we call on Congress to end its two-decade standoff on setting immigration policy — one of its most basic duties. And, as leaders of states, we pledge to share the accountability. Though border security is a national concern, and a nonnegotiable requirement of national security in a world with drug cartels and terrorists, we believe that states should be able to sponsor whatever immigrants serve the needs of their communities. As it is, the standstill on immigration hobbles both parties and, more seriously, endangers America's long-term wellbeing.

A growing, bipartisan group of senators appears to share our sense of urgency. But voices on one side call for an overly liberal national immigration policy that overlooks the toll on border states and encourages too many people to take dangerous journeys that can end in legal limbo. Meanwhile, voices on the other side call immigrants a burden, against all the evidence from economics and history. The United States became prosperous because many immigrants saw our beacon and seized the freedoms and opportunities offered here. That formula has not changed. As of 2021, for example, nearly half of America's Fortune 500 companies had been founded by an immigrant or the child of one.

At home, we see more ordinary stories of immigrants contributing to our state economies. Julian Diaz entered the United States in search of work in the 1990s. His son Juan now employs four other Hoosiers in a successful landscaping business, while Juan's son studies computer science in college. Bassam Salem, born in Egypt, came to the United States more than 30 years ago with his parents and grew up in Utah. He eventually secured permanent residency, became a U.S. citizen and founded two successful technology start-ups that have contributed millions to the economy.

Rapidly declining birthrates and accelerating retirements across the United States mean that our states' already wide job gaps will grow to crisis proportions without more families such as these causing our growth engines to sputter. Many of these jobs require high-level skills and entrepreneurship. But states are also awash in unfilled entry-level, low-skill roles — essential in agriculture, health care and the service industries.

So, count us as supporters of immigration sponsorship by the states. Under such authority, similar to what employers and universities have already, each state could make its own decisions. They could sponsor no visas or many visas each year, up to a limit set by Congress, for the specific sorts of jobs they need to fill. Immigration sponsorship would give states a dynamic means to attract new residents, both from a pool of new applicants from abroad and from the ranks of current asylum seekers. The policy would also expand the states' responsibility for the contributions and success of these folks in American life.

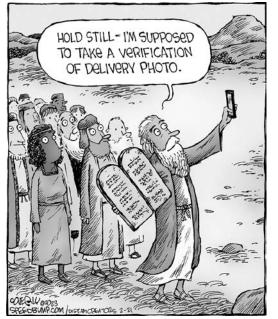

Washington would need to grant us such authority. And, of course, that's not the only task on Washington's list after two decades of punting. There is no way to approach immigration without three basic components: rules to determine who can come in and how, and who can stay; unflinching enforcement of such rules; and some kind of review-and-repeat process to assure that the United States offers paths to citizenship based on our evolving needs. The rules must include a practical approach to illegal immigrants who came to this country as children. And enforcement must include firm control of all entry points.

Perhaps it will help our representatives in Washington to know that governors and many other people back home in the states have their backs. The two of us are not unicorns, and last week's National Governors Association meeting encouraged us to believe that others will soon step up, as well.

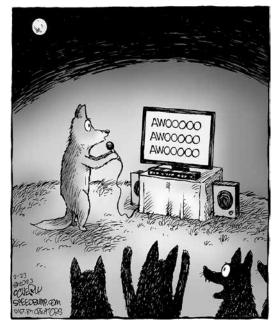

Our southwestern states bear the brunt of today's immigration catastrophe, which forces those states to house, clothe and feed an unrelenting stream of people. But in meaningful ways, every U.S. state shares a border with the rest of the world, and all of them need investment, markets and workers from abroad. That border can remain an embarrassment, or it can become a big asset to us once again.

Accused killer of beloved bishop charged with murder

■ David O'Connell, the former associate pastor at St. Raymond's Catholic Church in Downey, was killed last weekend inside his home.

By City News Service

HACIENDA HEIGHTS – A man accused of gunning down Los Angeles Catholic Auxiliary Bishop David O'Connell at his home in the home to check on him, because Hacienda Heights was charged Wednesday with murder.

Carlos Medina, 61, was arrested Monday in connection with the Saturday shooting of the 69-yearold bishop. Medina is the husband of O'Connell's housekeeper, and he also performed handyman work at the bishop's home, Sheriff Robert Luna said earlier this week.

George District Attorney Gascón said the murder charge against Medina includes an allegation of the personal use of a firearm, meaning Medina faces 35 years to life in prison if convicted.

court in downtown Los Angeles Wednesday afternoon, but his arraignment was postponed at the defense's request until March 22. He remains jailed in lieu of $2.03 million.

"I know this has been a shock for the community," Gascón said. "It was obviously a very tragic event, but I can't say enough about the professionalism and the work of the men and women of the L.A. County Sheriff's Department and the way they conducted this investigation, professionally and expeditiously."

O'Connell was found shot just before 1 p.m. Saturday at his home in the 1500 block of Janlu were recovered at Medina's home, Avenue, near Turnbull Canyon Road. Sheriff's officials confirmed Sunday that his death was being involved in the Saturday shooting.

investigated as a homicide. Luna said it was still being determined exactly when O'Connell was shot.

Luna said there were no signs of forced entry into O'Connell's home, and the bishop was shot in the bedroom of his home. Gascón said O'Connell had multiple gunshot wounds.

The bishop's body was discovered when a deacon went to O'Connell was apparently late for a meeting, Luna said.

Luna said tips from the public helped lead investigators to Medina, with one tipster saying that "Medina was acting strange, irrational and made comments about the bishop owing him money.'

But the sheriff stopped short of saying such a dispute led to the killing, saying it was "something that came up from one of the witnesses" -- and that investigators were still conducting interviews.

Gascón did not discuss possible motive when he Medina appeared briefly in announced the murder charge during a midday news conference, saying only that the case remains under investigation. Sheriff's Lt. Michael Modica said at the news conference that Medina made various statements after his arrest about a possible motive, but investigators found them to be largely nonsensical, leading them to believe there's no validity to the suggestion that a financial debt led to the killing.

> Medina was arrested around 8:15 a.m. Monday following an hours-long standoff at his home in the 2400 block of Kenwood Avenue in Torrance. Luna said two firearms and they were being tested to determine if either weapon was Luna also said that Medina's Frances X. Cabrini, Ascension, St. been "fully cooperative" has with detectives. While Medina was the husband of the bishop's housekeeper, Medina himself had also "previously done work at the bishop's residence," although it was unclear when, according to the sheriff.

Luna said Medina drove a dark-colored compact SUV similar to one seen on surveillance video pulling into O'Connell's driveway and leaving, although it was unsure when that occurred.

Luis Lopez was a neighbor of Medina's and told ABC7 that Medina seemed like a good man and "looked like he wouldn't hurt a fly."

O'Connell was a native of Ireland and had been a priest and later a bishop in Los Angeles for 45 years, Archbishop José Gomez said in a statement released following his death.

"He was a peacemaker with heart for the poor and the immigrant, and he had a passion for building a community where the sanctity and dignity of every human life was honored and protected," Gomez said.

At the time of his death, O'Connell -- widely known as "Bishop Dave" -- was vicar for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles' San Gabriel Pastoral Region, a post he had since 2015, when Pope Francis appointed him as an auxiliary bishop for the Los Angeles Archdiocese.

O'Connell had previously served as associate pastor at St. Raymond Catholic Church in Downey, St. Maria Goretti Catholic Church in Long Beach, and St. Hilary Church of Perpetual Adoration in Pico Rivera and then as pastor of St.

wife was being questioned and Eugene and St. Michael's parishes, all in Los Angeles.

> Meanwhile, many people continued to mourn O'Connell.

The L.A. City Council adjourned its meeting Tuesday in his honor, with several council members speaking about the bishop's impact on the community.

Councilwoman Monica Rodriguez said O'Connell "will be remembered as always fighting for change in the communities most impacted by violence."

Councilman Marqueece Harris-Dawson said, "This is one of our most loving and shining angels that we've lost.'

On Monday, LAPD Chief Michel Moore spoke of "an unimaginable and tragic loss of a peacemaker," adding, "may God welcome Bishop O'Connell home, a good and faithful servant. We all mourn this man's loss, and am grateful to the sheriff's department for their relentless pursuit and the community's assistance to identify the individual responsible."

State Sen. Bob Archuleta, D-Norwalk, said O'Connell was a friend of his, and offered condolences from Gov. Gavin Newsom and other state officials at a Monday afternoon news briefing with reporters.

"He served the community and went to Salesian High School in East Los Angeles to bring people together and move forward." Archuleta said.

Los Angeles County Supervisor Janice Hahn told reporters that O'Connell's death has "left me and other people from here to Ireland heartbroken. He was known to walk among gang members, the homeless and transients to bring

Gomez was overcome with emotion at a Monday news conference as he discussed the death of his friend and colleague, calling him "a good friend to all of Los Angeles."

"He worked to show compassion to the poor, to the homeless, to the immigrant, to all those living on chairman of the Subcommittee on society's margins," Gomez said. "He was a good priest and good bishop, and a man of peace."

O'Connell was born in County Cork, Ireland. He studied for the priesthood at All Hallows College in Dublin and was ordained to serve in the Archdiocese of Los Angeles in 1979, according to Doris Benavides, associate director of media relations for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles.

As chairman of the Immigration Task Force, O'Connell and families from Central America in recent years. He also sponsored immigrants in Catholic schools, a number of whom have advanced to

He served as a member of the Priest Pension Board and on the Together in Mission Board as well as the Archdiocesan Finance Council, the archdiocese said. He was a member of the Council of Priests and a Knight of Peter Claver.

At the national level, he was the Catholic Campaign for Human Development of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

In September, O'Connell was honored with the Evangelii Gaudium Award from St. John's Seminary in Camarillo, "for his selfless service to the community and the Church in L.A," Benavides said.
