ARTASTIC

Norwalk celebrates budding artists

■ The 12th annual Artastic drew large crowds of art enthusiasts.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

NORWALK - The Norwalk Arts and Sports Complex was a flash of color, art, and music last week as the city held its 12th annual Artastic event.

Each year, Artastic brings students and residents alike together to show off and compete their artistic skills. The event has continued to grow over time.

"Originally it wasn't this big; we started as a student art competition only, collaborating with the Norwalk La Mirada School District," said Pati Escano, Recreation Supervisor. "We started it, it was just a competition for the students. We showcased their art, and then we also showcased the cultural arts center and all the programs that we have to offer here.

This year's iteration - held on Friday, March 17 - included musical performances, multiple galleries, arts and crafts activities, chalk art, an open mic night, art vendors, food trucks, and a book fair.

Competitors were split into three categories, between young children, intermediate (14 and up), and professional. According to Escano, this year saw around competitors. Four $100 scholarships (two for middle school and two for high school) were given Jocelyne Cruz, 22, competed in Artastic previously as a student in Norwalk. She returned this year to participate in the street chalk art.

"Art is just a way of communication," said Cruz. "We're all just enjoying everything, to the point of critically thinking. How we communicate visually allows us to have certain spaces in the community."

Mayor Ana Valencia said Artastic is one of her favorite events "beautiful."

Because of so many things that have been happening, and of course recently the pandemic, we really do want to come together and

When we do that, we are providing an opportunity for all kinds of things, and some of it is healing; we have to come back together as a community and help us heal, help us appreciate, and help us really look at the things we have in different light.'

That was followed by another uncle, Adrian Enriquez in 2000, and finally a cousin Juan Enriquez in 2007.

"I'm very proud of myself," said Aaliah Enriquez, who won the title at Corona High and qualified for the Masters. "It took a lot of hard work. My teammates and coaches pushed me to do better. My toughest match was my last one (Championship match) because I was tired but I put in my all.

"I ended up winning and I was in shock and I was very happy. It just didn't seem real to me. My family was very happy for me. I actually didn't know that they (father, uncles and cousin) were CIF Champions until afterwards. That was pretty cool. We all celebrated that.'

Enriquez finished with a perfect 4-0 record in the championships, winning in dramatic fashion, 8-7, in double overtime against Lauren Malvitz of Claremont High.

"Her championship match was one for the record books," Ramirez said. "It was one of my more memorable matches to ever watch. It was meant to be.

To add to the drama of the second to last match of the championships was the power going out in the middle of the match in overtime. After five minutes had elapsed, it continued.

"She was getting very tired, and the delay helped her," he added. "She found a way to win."

Enriquez was winning in the third period of regulation, but was called for stalling and the match was even after the penalties.

In the first 30 second OT, Malvitz escaped to take a 7-6 lead. Trailing in the second OT by a point with 15 seconds left, Enriquez pulled a two-point reversal and held on for the 8-7 win.

NIMBYs threaten a plan to build more suburban housing

By Mara Gay

Mara Gay is a journalist and member of the New York Times editorial board.

In an insult to New Yorkers suffering from spiraling rents and home prices, both houses of New York's Democratic-controlled Legislature rejected an ambitious set of proposals from Gov. Kathy Hochul last week that would begin to address the crisis in available housing

The legislators appear to be capitulating to the panic of their suburban members, as well as a smaller but persistent group of NIMBYs who oppose development in New York City. Lately, those voices have proven stubborn. Some of the backlash to the effort to build more housing in the suburbs has evoked euphemistic language that might have brought a smile to a Southern segregationist in the era of "states' rights."

"We see it as an attack on our suburban communities," State Senator Jack Martins, a Republican from Nassau County on Long Island, said in a hearing on the housing proposal in Albany on March 1

Moments later, State Senator Pamela Helming, a Republican who represents the Rochester suburbs, said her opposition to the governor's housing plan was about "helping retain the unique character of our communities."

Donald X. Clavin Jr., a town supervisor in Nassau County, also a Republican, co-wrote a letter last week encouraging officials to protest the governor's housing plan, saying it was "imperative that local government retain the authority to act in the best interests of those they represent."

The proposal from Ms. Hochul, a moderate Democrat, would simply bring the state's housing policy into the 21st century, building crucially needed housing in the suburbs by slashing Jim Crow-era zoning laws. Under that promising plan, New York City and its suburbs would be required to increase their housing supply by 3 percent every three years, and towns elsewhere in the state by 1 percent every three years. More housing would be built in areas along commuter rail lines. The state would be able to override local zoning laws in areas that fail to increase their housing supply.

The knee-jerk alarmism over building more housing in the suburbs is embarrassing. It's also completely unnecessary. Other states, including Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts and Oregon, have already enacted measures similar to the ones the governor has proposed. Some, like California, have essentially banned single-family zoning altogether. The purpose isn't to attack the suburbs but to help them grow, along with the rest of the state.

The housing crisis in New York State has locked out middle-class families and young people from homeownership, left hundreds of thousands burdened with high rents, and sent tens of thousands of working people into public shelters. Of 3.43 million renters in the state, more than half, roughly 1.7 million, spend more than 30 percent of their income on rent. Yet instead of strengthening Ms. Hochul's housing plan, the State Senate and Assembly last week offered proposals that would gut it.

Just how out of touch is the State Legislature? Alternative proposals from both houses would keep the housing targets set by the governor, but give the state no authority to enforce them. They would scrap the plan's requirement for new housing along commuter rails. They would cut proposed measures for relief in New York City, including a plan to legalize basement apartments and make them safer. The Assembly proposal would also render moot the proposed expansion of a New York City program aimed at converting empty office space to housing.

Instead, the Legislature's plan would offer $500 million in incentives to be distributed to localities that meet the housing targets, but impose no consequences for those that choose not to build new housing.

"We believe we can get there with incentives," Andrea Stewart-Cousins, the Senate majority leader, said last Thursday in Albany.

But there is solid evidence from other states, including Connecticut and Massachusetts, that incentives alone will not result in more housing. One reason, as noted by the Furman Center, a housing policy research group, is that wealthy towns generally prefer to keep their exclusionary zoning policies rather than receive unneeded funds from the state. Many of these communities have long histories of enacting exclusionary zoning laws and have shown that they will not produce the housing the region needs on their own.

A state in the throes of a housing crisis can't simply let them do as they please, all while they benefit from billions in state investment in commuter rail systems.

In one bright spot, the Legislature did signal some support for common-sense protections for renters in good standing. One such proposal, sought by housing advocates, would limit rental increases for market-rate apartments upon lease renewal to up to 1.5 times the Consumer Price Index or 3 percent, whichever is higher, except for owner-occupied buildings with a small number of units. (With current inflation, that would allow rent increases of about 10 percent.) Landlords may in some cases be able to charge more when they can show they have incurred additional costs, but could not evict a tenant except for violating the terms of the lease, a policy known as "good cause eviction."

The real estate industry is fighting hard against the proposal. Yet New Jersey enacted similar basic protections for renters years ago and continues to outpace New York in housing production. These protections are badly needed in New York, where price gouging is common and evictions are on the rise. Addressing the housing crisis means keeping people in their homes as well as building more housing.

But tenant protections alone will not solve the root problem of the crisis, which is the dire lack of housing supply. To do that, the Legislature will have to work with the governor to dismantle the single-family zoning laws that make it impossible to build new housing in the suburbs.

So far, the proposals from the Legislature are not serious. There is also evidence that they are out of step with some of their constituents. One survey of state residents, paid for by Open New York and other pro-housing groups and conducted last month by Slingshot Strategies, found significant support for building more housing in the suburbs.

More than two-thirds of respondents statewide, 72 percent, said they supported building more housing near train stations. Of a group surveyed in suburban Westchester and Putnam Counties, north of New York City, 56 percent said they would support giving the state authority to override local zoning laws in towns that fail to build more housing.

The poll, though small, reflects the intensity of the housing crisis in the state, where even middle- and upper-middle-class suburbanites have found that their adult children cannot afford to live or raise families in the communities in which they grew up.

New York has never fully reckoned with its history of racist housing policies, which have helped make the region among the most segregated in the United States. Even New York officials who acknowledge that history appear unprepared to remedy it.

"I couldn't agree more that there was redlining, exclusionary zoning — there's a lot of ills," said Mayor Mary Marvin of Bronxville, in Westchester, in an interview recently. "But I just think this plan is a disaster. We are so darn built out." Ms. Marvin said she would be open to building some "work force housing" to help police officers and teachers live in the community.

Whether they like it or not, New York officials fighting to maintain these exclusionary housing policies are on the wrong side of history, defending zoning laws written to keep Black, Hispanic, Jewish, Asian and other Americans from sharing in the prosperity and opportunity of the country's suburbs.

Governor Hochul and the many state legislators who are serious about addressing the housing crisis have a legacy-making chance to push hard to dismantle these policies. Millions of New Yorkers are counting on them.

Why authorities must expand deposit protections to restore confidence in banks

By Bob Diamond

Bob Diamond is chief executive of Atlas Merchant Capital. He was on the board and president of Barclays from 2005 to 2012 and chief executive from 2011 to 2012.

Over the past two weeks, we have seen the Federal Reserve, Treasury Department and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation step in to guarantee all deposits at two banks and coordinate additional deposits at a third. This was sound policy, but further action is needed if the U.S. regional and specialist banking model is going to survive. That's why Treasury Secretary Janet L. Yellen's comments Tuesday that the U.S. government will back deposits at smaller American banks, if needed, are a move in the right direction.

In the aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis, my mantra as president of Barclays was: How do we balance making banks safer and sounder, while also driving economic growth and job creation?

Asking myself this same question today, I see an obvious course of action: Restore confidence and stability in regional and specialist banks by expanding federal deposit protections and ensuring adequate regulatory supervision. This would do much to stem the flow of deposits out of these institutions and into the large banks, allowing well-run banks to thrive and providing security for U.S. depositors.

It is not simply a question of supporting banks, but of supporting consumers, small businesses and homeowners across the country. Smaller banks have knowledge and expertise that their larger peers do not. They are intimately familiar with the economic conditions and needs of their customers in specific regions or industries. A regional bank in a rural area might be more willing to lend to farms and agricultural businesses than a larger national bank that might not have the same understanding of the local economy. In fact, roughly 40 percent of bank lending in the United States comes from those outside the largest 25 institutions.

Regional and specialist banks also play an important role in supporting small and medium-size businesses. These businesses often have difficulty obtaining financing from larger banks, which tend to focus on larger, more established corporations. Smaller, more focused banks, on the other hand, are more likely to lend to small businesses and are able to do so at a significantly lower cost. In addition to providing loans, regional banks can offer services tailored to the needs of small businesses, such as payroll processing and merchant services. By providing this critical support to small businesses, regional and specialist banks help to drive job growth and support local economies.

Critics will point to the potential consequences of deposit concentration risk. If a large depositor or group of depositors were to withdraw its funds from a smaller bank, it could cause a liquidity crisis and put the bank at risk of failure. Even if the bank does not fail, the sudden loss of deposits could severely limit its lending capacity, hurting the local economy and potentially leading to a decline in property values.

These risks are not new and have been effectively addressed by policymakers in the past. Expanding deposit protections would do much to mitigate the worst risks in the near term. Furthermore, the question of deposit concentration within individual banks must be weighed against the risks of concentration across the banking sector as a whole. After 2008, roughly half of all American deposits were held in just five big banks. This is an already remarkably high level of concentration, the result of consolidation in the industry that left depositors with fewer banks to choose from. Without coordinated policy action, there will be even less choice, and the share of deposits held in just a handful of banks will rise further.

Were that to happen, the regional and specialist banking model in the United States would effectively be dead, with thousands of jobs lost and consumers, small businesses and savers left with a banking oligopoly unable to cater to their needs or give them the same attention and support.

What is to be done? Americans might forget that the reason we have so many banks is that we have deposit insurance. But at present, the $250,000 FDIC cap on insured deposits is too low. At the very least, this cap should be raised considerably, and the specific guarantees given to depositors at Silicon Valley Bank and Signature Bank should be extended to other small and medium-size banks

The most effective option, however, would be for federal regulators to extend FDIC insurance to all deposits, at least temporarily. This would be in line with the recommendation made last week by a coalition of midsize banks.

It is important to keep in mind that such a policy would be funded by FDIC-regulated banks, not the taxpayer. Creditors, shareholders and company management would not be bailed out or enjoy any additional protections. The rigors of the market would remain in place.

This is a very different situation from the one in 2008. Banks have faced significantly more restrictive capital and regulatory actions and have increasingly become more and more like utilities. This was underlined during the pandemic, when banks effectively acted as agents of government fiscal support. Extending existing deposit insurance reflects this changed status and does so while allowing banks to fail without putting depositors at risk.

I Was a Teenage Librarian. Don't Arrest Me

By Froma Harrop

 $Follow\ From a\ Harrop\ on\ Twitter\ @From a\ Harrop.$

Some time ago, I worked after school and during summers at my town's public library. My supervisor was Mrs. Fowkes, a stunning grandmother who, in summer, wore straw hats with flowers.

There I mastered the trick of repairing loose bindings with glue and folded wax paper. Then I was tasked with rolling the carts down the aisles, placing books in their exact Dewey Decimal location. After a while, I was allowed to work the front desk.

It was there that Mrs. Fowkes, standing straight-spined in a cloud of lavender water, explained to me how we handled dirty books.

Ours was a community that associated education with open minds, and so the library felt obliged to carry sexually explicit books deemed of literary value. The solution was to store them hidden on a shelf right behind the front desk and check them out if a patron specifically asked for the title.

During the slow times, I would take a look. It was there that I became familiar with the pornographic novels of Henry Miller. My, my, my.

Many states and towns are making it a crime for libraries to carry books local censors have declared off-limits. Even more than pornography, today's thought police seem incensed over gay-friendly literature and controversial arguments on race.

None of this explains why a school district in Arkansas actually removed "Harry Potter" from school library open shelves. Something to do with praise for "good witches," so we hear.

North Dakota may ban public libraries from lending books that contain "explicit sexual material." A bill before the state Senate goes into agonizing detail about what parts of a female breast may appear in an illustration or even word descriptions. Librarians who offend could face up to 30 days in jail.

Missouri, meanwhile, passed a measure that could put school librarians behind bars for up to a year.

Such laws evoke terrible dreams of Mrs. Fowkes being hauled away in chains and me being placed in juvenile detention. But there's also something quaint about them.

Mobile phones give Americans easy access to the vilest porn in all its variety — and in easy-to-watch video. There's also no lack of online commentary on topics many deem too woke to handle. And you can't stop any of it.

Nowadays the trollers tend to be right-wingers playing power games and getting a charge out of their intimidation tactics. But crusades to police media consumption are also being waged by elements on the left. Several colleges now let students anonymously report someone they feel — or say they feel — shows discrimination or bias.

A group of Stanford University professors wants to end its system whereby students can report a "Protected Identity Harm Incident." What stirred opposition was an anonymous denunciation of a student found reading Adolf Hitler's "Mein Kampf."

First off, reading the Nazi manifesto in no way indicates approval of its message. People read it to better understand the lunacy behind Nazi propaganda. Any serious student of the Holocaust would read it to better understand the horrific events it helped unleash.

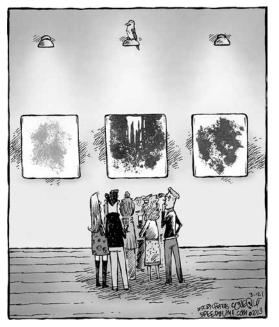

Back at Henry Miller, later feminists denounced his books as "male chauvinist," which they were, and degraded women, which they did. But go ahead and read them for their literary value or for other obvious reasons. And if your public library fears carrying Miller's works, Amazon will be happy to fill in.

Meanwhile, the defenders of youthful innocence surely know that teens are finding all kinds of "objectionable" material where they themselves go for it — in the online universe. More than worrying about what people read, they should worry that people aren't reading much at all.

Threats against librarians begin the end of civilization.

DOWNEY — Gov. Gavin Newsom has announced a partnership with Civica Rx to provide insulin to Californians and look forward to our for $30 for 10 milliliters -which he said was as little as one-tenth of the current cost.

Newsom visited a Kaiser warehouse in Downey on Saturday as part of his tour of California discussing his administrative policies in lieu of a traditional State of the State address.

partnership as a way to lower the health-care burden for residents without "subsidizing costs or socializing costs" but to address the "underlying" costs.

The insulin program, which will be administered through CalRx, was characterized by the governor as "market disruption," which he hoped would prompt major drug companies to lower their prices for the drug.

"This a big deal for us. This is not happening anywhere else in the United States," the governor said.

Jeremiah Parra named Whittier/Pico Rivera 2023 Youth of the Year

WHITTIER – Pioneer High School senior Jeremiah Parra college." was struggling to find his footing at school after suffering through the loss of both of his parents. Admittedly listless in class, Parra said he had no expectations moving forward after high school. Parra's life began to change when his aunt, now looking after Parra and his three younger siblings, dropped him off at the Boys and Girls Club of Whittier/Pico Rivera.

There, Parra rediscovered his love of learning, putting him back on track to graduate. Parra began to indulge his creative side as a graphic designer, establishing his own line of clothing. After being shown guidance and compassion from his mentors. Parra wanted to give back, joining the Club's Leader in Training program as a teen tutor.

For his ability to overcome adversity and commitment to bettering the lives of others, Parra was named the Boys & Girls Club of Whittier/ Pico Rivera's 2023 Youth of the Year. Parra, one of three finalists for the award, received a trophy and certificate of recognition at the Youth of the Year presentation in early 2023.

"If I had continued on my path of not caring how I did in school, if I had not come to the Boys and Girls Club and realized the impact of taking responsibility, then I would not be standing here as a candidate for Youth of the Year," Parra said. "Now I'm proud to tell you that I am going to graduate high school, and will enroll at Río Hondo College to study digital design. I will be the first person in my family to go to

Parra lost his father when he was 11 years old, and his mother died during the pandemic. Parra's aunt stepped in to serve as guardian and help Parra regain his focus. When Parra and his siblings first entered the Boys & Girls Club, they were welcomed with open arms. Working with staff mentors, Parra found time to do his homework and was encouraged to participate in activities such as cooking and art.

Parra's enthusiasm and work ethic made him a natural for the Club's Leader in Training program, and he quickly gained recognition for his willingness to volunteer his time to help others. Showing responsibility and compassion, Parra became a role model for other children at the Club. In 2021, Parra was selected as Outstanding Boys & Girls Club

'We are so very proud of Jeremiah, who has responded to the adversity in his life by continually trying to make the world around him a better place for everyone," Pioneer High Principal Mary Chapman said. "We are grateful to have community partners such as the Boys & Girls Club who provide our families with an extra layer of support, and helping guide their path toward future success.

The Boys & Girls Club of Whittier/ Pico Rivera has served the community since 1967, with a mission of enabling all young people to reach their full potential as productive, caring and responsible

Shake Shack coming to Downey

DOWNEY — Shake Shack, the popular fast food chain known for its burgers, hot dogs and shakes, is opening a location in Downtown Downey, city planning staff confirmed.

The restaurant has been approved to take over the former Legends Board Shop at 8300 Firestone Blvd.

The project was recently approved by the Planning Commission and calls for the demolition of the existing building and construction of a new 3,624. sq. ft. restaurant with a 933 sq. ft. outdoor patio, drive-thru, and parking at the rear of the property along Downey Avene.

Guerra, who voted to approve the project, expressed enthusiasm about Shake Shack's pending

"The revitalization of this corner in the heart of our city will continue to enhance our downtown," he said. "Our award winning Downtown Specific Plan, which includes our Downtown Downey District, is another example of businesses working together with the city to re-energize our community. Our Planning Commission saw this opportunity and enthusiastically worked to help facilitate this upgrade to our downtown. I'm excited and look forward to many Planning commissioner Mario other new projects in the works."

The Shake Shack in Downey will be the company's first location in Southeast Los Angeles County.

The New York-based company started out of a hotdog cart in Madison Square Park in 2001.

In 2010, Shake Shack expanded its operations, opening up locations throughout New York City, including in the Theater District, the Upper East Side, and in the Chelsea neighborhoods. It also opened a location in Miami's South Beach, its first location outside of New York City.

Today, there are 440 locations worldwide.

Shake Shack maintains that partnering with local communities is important in its expansion plans.

"Every Shack is a reflection of the community it's a part of, from partnering with local artists and ingredient purveyors, to hosting fundraisers with local non-profit partners and school groups," the restaurant said.
