Norwalk's strong season continues with shutout win over Firebaugh

■ The Lancers continued their dominant season with a 10-0 win Wednesday as the team's seniors are honored.

By John Sherrard Contributor

NORWALK - Wednesday's high school baseball game between visiting Firebaugh and Norwalk, wasn't all about the score, but the gathering of family honoring the 10 seniors for the Lancers.

Sure, Norwalk (18-4, 12-0) won 10-0 in five innings, but the focus before the game was on a big portion of the current team.

Ten of the 15 Vikings players are seniors and have led them to their best record in many years and are very close to winning their first league title in that same span.

"We kind of knew last year that this would be the year, especially from last year that I have all of my pitching back," said Norwalk coach William Wenrick, who is in his ninth year at Norwalk. Wenrick also won a CIF-SS Championship playing for

"As coaches, when this class of 2023 came in, I'm talking about all the coaches, baseball, football, basketball, and so forth, the football coaches said we have some good athletes, it's going to be a good class and it has been.'

Wenrick added how important community is to his program.

"I just want everyone to know out there it's for the community," Wenrick added. "It's great personally, really fulfilling, but here with our new administration, and the community, we do a lot of stuff for the community. We just want to thank the community for supporting us. We had a great senior night with the parents.

The big side story to the '23 Lancers season had two big possibilities staring them right in the face – an undefeated league title and championship, which could coincide all scoring for the Lancers. with the Norwalk Softball team, happen by next week. It would be a first in both programs history if both teams win out in league.

remaining, while baseball still has a big game today (Friday April 21) against them next Wednesday and finally a league season-ending game against Lynwood next Friday.

After all the festivities with the seniors and their families prior to the first pitch, the Lancers wasted little time getting on the scoreboard.

In the home half of the first inning, Norwalk pushed across six runs, as the first six batters all

> "That (softball winning a league title undefeated) would be huge," he said. "I know that our class, when we started in our freshman year, we were really dedicated to our game. We wanted to help get Norwalk back on the map. We found a lot of success already and the job is not finished. We want to take that game on Friday (Mayfair) and again (next Wednesday).'

Senior Kevin Carrillo and Barnhill combined for six Ks between them in the final three innings.

"It was good energy, and we felt the crowd and that made us feel good," said Barnhill, who has been only one of the two seniors, along with Martinez, on varsity for all four years. "It's really big to think that both teams could do that (winning league undefeated). "We're just trying to put on a show and put out our best effort, because at the end of the day, this is our last time ever playing with these guys. The final two runs came across in the fourth inning, as Nakano connected with his second double of the game and came in on an error by the Firebaugh centerfielder allowing Jonathan Guzman to reach base. Guzman scored on a single to left by Cancino.

This will be the second consecutive year the Lancers have reached the CIF playoffs, with 2022 being the first time in the last sparked an international eight years. In State of City speech, Bass declares LA is not 'where it needs to be'

■ Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass said there is increased urgency to take people off the streets and create safer neighborhoods.

By City News Service

LOS ANGELES - Mayor Karen Bass delivered her first State of the City Address Monday, saying, "I am 127 days into my administration, and I cannot declare that the state of our city is where it needs to be.'

But at the same time, Bass painted a picture of hope and "increased urgency" as the city grapples with major challenges such as homelessness and public safety and takes aim at what she repeatedly called her vision for a "new L.A."

"I am proud to report that together, we have brought change to the city of Los Angeles," said Bass, standing in the Council Chambers of City Hall before council members and an array of city officials.

"We have increased urgency at City Hall. And we have a clarity of purpose, and have focused our work on the people's most pressing challenges. After years of frustration, tonight, we can see a clearer path to a new Los Angeles ... where the state of our city will be stronger, healthier, happier and safer.'

"Real Men Have Chichis" to start workshop performances in Los Angeles

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY - Ignacio Gonzalez is already known around Downey for his work with the Southern California Resource Center for Independent Living. He has dabbled in stand-up comedy.

Now, he can add playwright to his resume.

Gonzalez's new - and firstplay "Real Men Have Chichis" is at the Frida Khalo Theater in Los Angeles.

The play centers around young Latino man Lazaro, who is looking to become his own independent, healthy person and break free of his family's loving suffocation and intoxicating food.

"His family wants to keep him close by, he wants to move away," said Gonzalez. "They physically want him to be a part of the family and not leave and be more successful then they are, and they entice him also with all the goodtasting food. He wants to try to be healthy, and the rest of the family eats and drinks and is looking to have a good time.

"He's financially, emotionally, health-wise wants to be an independent guy and he's having a hard time sort of wiggling away from his family."

Some of Gonzalez's own personal experiences made it into

"One is trying to get healthy," said Gonzalez. "If you might've known me, I was a whole lot bigger than I am now. Since my heaviest 10, 12 years ago, I've lost like 140 pounds.

"Part of it, with the family, they do it out of love, they try to feed preparing for a brief workshop stint you and that's how they show you support, by feeding you. Then, you turning food down, its something they might see as a slap in the face, like you're insulting them. You're supposed to take food because in our culture, we don't have much, but we have food; that's what I have to offer you, and if you turn that down, I don't have anything else to offer you other than that, so it's a big insult. Things like that, where I found you're trying to do it in a nice way, be polite and appreciative, and it's difficult.'

> Gonzalez was encouraged to write the play by writer Josefina Lopez - known for "Real Women Have Curves" - after he took her script writing class at Casa 0101 in Boyle Heights.

> "At one point, she told me, 'Hey, you should make the male version of Real Women Have Curves," said

Gonzalez. "This was four years ago, maybe. So, I said, 'Okay, I'll give it a shot.' I did the first 10 pages which she always asked for...and it was good, she liked it. Then, I kind of let it go and it was hard to keep going; I would pick it up, put it back down

"At the end of last year, she said 'Hey, what happened to the play? If you do it now, we'll put it on. I'll look it over, we'll produce it somewhere. I got to work, finished it up, and now here we are."

Gonzalez hopes audiences walk away entertained.

"We do tackle issues against family, health, current economic conditions," said Gonzalez. "I want to, this is from the cast, I want people to laugh. You know, the cliched 'You'll laugh, you'll cry.' But that's what I see from the cast. They have to pause because they laugh at the jokes, they cry, they relate to the characters and their struggle in their own life and they share their personal experiences...that's what I hope the audience can take away,

Trump was indicted but who are the victims?

By Jacob Sullum

Jacob Sullum is a senior editor at Reason magazine.

Since the New York indictment of Donald Trump was unsealed last week, critics across the political spectrum have noted the legal problems with transforming one hush payment into 34 felonies. But in assessing the seriousness of this case, it is also relevant to ask who was injured by the former president's actions, a question that poses more of a puzzle than Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg suggests.

Bragg says Trump "violate(d) state and federal election laws" when he instructed attorney Michael Cohen to pay porn star Stormy Daniels $130,000 shortly before the 2016 presidential election. In exchange, Daniels agreed to refrain from talking to the press about her alleged 2006 affair with Trump.

Federal prosecutors viewed that payment as an illegal campaign contribution, and Cohen accepted that characterization in a 2018 guilty plea. But that plea hardly proves that the Justice Department's interpretation of the law was correct, since Cohen, who ultimately received a three-year sentence, was facing charges that could have sent him to prison for decades.

"The best interpretation of the law," former Federal Election Commission Chairman Bradley Smith wrote after Cohen's guilty plea, "is that it simply is not a campaign expense to pay blackmail for things that happened years before one's candidacy — and thus nothing Cohen (or, in this case, Trump, too) did is a campaign finance crime." At the very least, Smith said, "it is unclear whether paying blackmail to a mistress is 'for the purpose of influencing an election,' and so must be paid with campaign funds, or a 'personal use,' and so prohibited from being paid with campaign funds."

Even UCLA law professor Richard L. Hasen, who is skeptical of Bragg's case but thought there was enough evidence to federally prosecute Trump for accepting an illegal campaign contribution, concedes that proving he "knowingly and willfully" violated the law "would not have been a slam dunk." In any event, federal prosecutors conspicuously declined to try, even after Trump left office and Merrick Garland replaced William Barr as attorney general.

Assuming the Justice Department could have made that case but for some reason decided it was not worth the effort, the question remains: Who was victimized by the hush payment? Bragg thinks voters suffered because they were deprived of "damaging information" that might have influenced their choice between Trump and Hillary Clinton.

Yet Trump had a long, widely familiar history of extramarital affairs. It seems unlikely that yet another one would have swayed voters who were otherwise inclined to support him.

Suppose Trump had used campaign money to directly pay off Daniels, as the Justice Department's theory in its case against Cohen suggests he should have, rather than using personal funds to reimburse Cohen. The result would have been the same: Daniels would have kept quiet for the time being, and any scandal would have been postponed until after the election.

To convert Trump's uncharged and unproven violation of federal law into a state crime, Bragg is relying on a New York statute that makes it a misdemeanor to falsify business records "with intent to defraud." Trump did that, Bragg says, by misrepresenting his reimbursement of Cohen as payment for legal services.

Trump allegedly committed that offense 34 times — once for each invoice, check and ledger entry recording the payments. And because those records were aimed at concealing "another crime," prosecutors say, each qualifies as a distinct felony.

In common parlance, "intent to defraud" implies that Trump was trying to rip someone off. But according to New York appeals courts, it is enough to show that a defendant acted "for the purpose of frustrating the state's power" to "faithfully carry out its own law."

The victim, in other words, was the government, which had an interest in prosecuting debatable violations of state election law that hinge on debatable interpretations of federal law. It is hard to muster much indignation at that injury, let alone enough to support 34 felony charges.

If the U.S. wants to stop Mexican cartels, stop supplying them with guns

By Jonathan Lowy and Luis Moreno

Jonathan Lowy is the president of Global Action on Gun Violence. Luis Moreno is the former U.S. ambassador to Jamaica and former consul general in Monterrey, Mexico.

According to recent reports, former president Donald Trump is preparing battle plans to attack Mexico if he regains the White House. This is only the latest escalation of saber-rattling in the wake of the recent kidnapping and killing of Americans in Mexico. Former U.S. attorney general William P. Barr, Rep. Dan Crenshaw (Tex.) and Sen. Lindsey O. Graham (S.C.) are among those calling for U.S. military action in Mexico to take on drug cartels.

There is no debating the threat the cartels pose. The fentanyl they push is killing thousands on both sides of the border. In Mexico, they torture and kill journalists to silence them, battle law enforcement and the military, and terrorize civilians. Cartels are largely responsible for as many as 100,000 Mexicans who have been "disappeared" — kidnapped and probably killed — and the 20,000 confirmed killed every year. The violence is spurring migration at the U.S. border. And these transnational criminal organizations are spreading to the United States.

The cartels need to be stopped. But this is not a problem Washington can bomb its way out of. Sending in troops won't help stop the violence and drug trafficking. There is, however, something the United States can do that would: Cut off the gun pipeline that arms the cartels.

It's shocking but not surprising that at least one of the guns used in the recent kidnapping was trafficked from the United States. Seventy to 90 percent of Mexican drug cartels' guns are trafficked from U.S. gun stores, supplied by U.S. manufacturers and distributors.

Why do the cartels' traffickers risk border crossings to get guns? Because Mexico has strong laws regulating gun sales and only one gun store, which restricts criminals from obtaining weapons there. But in the United States, federally licensed firearms dealers can sell dozens of AR-15s and AK-47s and thousands of rounds of ammunition to purchasers without even asking why a buyer would want such an arsenal. Manufacturers continue to supply these dealers despite their dangerous practices, even though the U.S. Justice Department told them to self-police their distribution chain more than 20 years ago.

Money and guns from the United States drive the deadly violence and drug trafficking in Mexico. The money the cartels use to pay for the guns comes largely from their sale of illegal drugs to buyers in the United States. The cartels and the gun industry profit from this deadly trade, while hundreds of thousands suffer.

What has Congress done about it? In 2004, it failed to renew the 10-year ban on assault weapons, which made it possible to recklessly sell them to traffickers. A study found that for both of the two years that followed, there was a 60 percent spike in homicides in Mexico near the border. And mass shootings in the United States have tripled since the ban lapsed.

In 2005, Congress passed a law to shield bad actors in the gun industry from accountability for the harm they cause. Gun manufacturers Barrett and Browning make and sell to civilians .50-caliber sniper rifles that can pierce armor and shoot down helicopters. U.S. law enforcement focuses on arresting traffickers, who are easily replaced. But it refuses to take on the U.S. gun industry, which is the source of the weapons used by criminals in Mexico and the United States.

If those who call for military intervention in Mexico truly want to stop the cartels, they should support a ban on assault weapons and bulk sales, and greater accountability and enforcement against gun companies that supply cross-border traffickers. The Biden administration should also crack down on dangerous industry practices.

Instead, the "send in the troops" politicians support policies that enable cartels to amass arsenals. After assault-style weapons were used to kill 19 children and two adults in Uvalde, 23 people in El Paso (including eight Mexicans) and 26 in Sutherland Springs — all in his home state of Texas — Crenshaw opposed requiring background checks for all gun sales, even though nearly 90 percent of Americans support them.

There is serious policy, and then there's political bluster. When it comes to the fentanyl crisis and violence in Mexico, there has lately been too much of the latter and not enough of the former. Reforming the gun industry to stop the crime gun pipeline is a serious and necessary solution to this ongoing emergency.

People living with early Alzheimer's need President Biden's help

By Sue Peschin

Sue Peschin is the president & CEO of the Alliance for Aging Research in Washington, DC.

Last year, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) announced that it would refuse to cover an entire class of FDA-approved therapies for the treatment of mild cognitive impairment and early dementia due to Alzheimer's disease. CMS' decision effectively cut off access for the vast majority of beneficiaries living with early Alzheimer's, except those wealthy seniors who could choose to pay out-of-pocket.

The decision, and its aftermath, does not represent what President Biden says he values, which is people. It was a shocking and disheartening illustration of what happens when bureaucrats crunch numbers and forget about the people behind the math.

CMS applied an extralegal tool called "coverage with evidence development" (CED) to all monoclonal antibody therapies for early Alzheimer's. Under a CED, Medicare denies coverage for an FDA-approved item or service, except for treatments provided through a very narrowly constructed clinical study.

Once CMS places a treatment in CED, it's extraordinarily difficult to reverse the decision.

But, the agency's April 7, 2022, Alzheimer's coverage decision was the first time CMS applied CED to an on-label use of an FDA-approved drug. There are strong signals from CMS that it won't be the last, as gene and stem cell therapies for cancer and rare diseases continue to progress through clinical development.

A report on CED called Façade of Evidence: How Medicare's Coverage with Evidence Development Rations Care and Exacerbates Inequity, issued by my organization, found that Medicare beneficiaries of color and those living in rural areas are more likely to be denied access under CEDs because the rigid conditions of coverage primarily direct care to urban medical centers in wealthier areas.

The FDA recently approved a second monoclonal antibody treatment called Leqembi that slowed progression of early Alzheimer's by 27% over an 18-month trial. Many neurologists who were skeptical of the first drug say Leqembi could be a gamechanger

However, the Alzheimer's community, including the American Academy of Neurology and more than 200 research experts in the space, have had to plead with CMS to revise its extreme Medicare coverage restrictions. So far, CMS has rejected those requests.

As the president notes in his November 2022 Proclamation on National Alzheimer's Disease Awareness Month, "Alzheimer's is common and especially cruel, robbing people of their memories, thoughts, and identity over many years. Across the Nation, this epidemic is growing: In the next 30 years, the number of Americans with Alzheimer's is expected to reach nearly 14 million, straining families and our health care system. Fortunately, we are on the cusp of life-saving advances that can forever change the course of the disease"

We completely agree. He needs to step in so people living with early Alzheimer's get a fair shot at more time with their families.

Smoking, lung cancer heavily impact Asian Americans

Contributed by Kaiser Permanente

As the nation recognizes April as National Minority Health Awareness Month, it's important to consider the health disparities affecting racial and ethnic minorities, including why lung cancer is so prevalent among Asian Americans, and claims thousands of lives each year within that Lung cancer is the second most prevalent disease among all cancers and is the leading cause of cancer deaths within the Asian American community. According to the Surveillance, Epidemiology, and End Results (SEER) Program at the National Cancer Institute, there were 25,608 cases of lung and bronchus cancers that contributed to 11.2% of all diagnosed cancers in non-Hispanic Asians and Pacific Islanders from 2015 to 2019.

SEER added there were 19,406 reported deaths from lung and bronchus cancers, contributing to 20.7% of all cancer deaths within to ask your doctor if you qualify for the same racial group from 2016 to an annual lung cancer screening,"

The Association of Community Cancer Centers reports that:

Lung cancer is 18% higher among Southeast Asians than White Americans.

Chinese individuals have the highest mortality rates of lung cancer among all Asian subgroups.

Smoking rates are significantly higher among Southeast Asians.

Smoking is the primary risk factor driving lung cancer rates in the Asian American community. However, developing lung cancer and mortality can be prevented, and quitting smoking as soon as possible can lead to a significant reduction in lung cancer risk.

Additionally, the Preventative Services Task Force recommends annual lung cancer screening for current and former smokers who meet certain criteria.

"If you smoke or have smoked in the past, it's a good idea for you said Dr. Adriel A. Fajilan, a pulmonologist with Kaiser Permanente Orange County. "This is especially true for those who are at the highest risk level for lung cancer - people who are 50- to 80-years-old who are, or were, heavy smokers."

Anh. T. Dinh, who immigrated to the United States from Vietnam, is a survivor of stage 2 lung cancer and a former smoker, starting the nicotine habit at age 14. Dinh, 69, said he did not have any second thoughts about quitting smoking after his lung cancer diagnosis.

Today, the Orange County resident and lung cancer survivor says he has a simple message for fellow Asian Americans, and evervone else.

"If they smoke, they should stop. Smoking is not good for your health, your lungs, and you can get cancer, just like I did," he said. "Parents should also teach their kids about the dangers of smoking because of how children are influenced and often fall to peer pressure. Parents must make every effort to protect their children's health."

How does lung cancer begin?

Lung cancer starts when abnormal cells grow out of control in the lung. Lung cancer can develop anywhere in the lungs, affect any part of the respiratory system, and if left untreated, can spread to organs outside the lungs.

What are the symptoms?

The first signs of lung cancer may include:

- Coughing
- Wheezing
- Shortness of breath
- Chest pain
- Coughing up blood Fatigue

"If you smoke, quitting significantly extend your lifespan,'

Dr. Fajilan said. "It's never too late to quit the nicotine habit, and there are many programs out there that will help you do so."

OPINION: People living with early Alzheimer's need President Biden's help

By Sue Peschin

Sue Peschin is the president & CEO of the Alliance for Aging Research in Washington, DC.

Last year, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) announced that it would refuse to cover an entire class of FDA-approved therapies for the treatment of mild cognitive impairment and early dementia due to Alzheimer's disease. CMS' decision effectively cut off access for the vast majority of beneficiaries living with early Alzheimer's, except those wealthy seniors who could choose to pay out-of-pocket.

The decision, and its aftermath, does not represent what President Biden says he values, which is people. It was a shocking and disheartening illustration of what happens when bureaucrats crunch numbers and forget about the people behind the math.

CMS applied an extralegal tool called "coverage with evidence development" (CED) to all monoclonal antibody therapies for early Alzheimer's. Under a CED, Medicare denies coverage for an FDA-approved item or service, except for treatments provided through a very narrowly constructed clinical study.

Once CMS places a treatment in CED, it's extraordinarily difficult to reverse the decision.

But, the agency's April 7, 2022, Alzheimer's coverage decision was the first time CMS applied CED to an on-label use of an FDA-approved drug. There are strong signals from CMS that it won't be the last, as gene and stem cell therapies for cancer and rare diseases continue to progress through clinical development.

A report on CED called Façade of Evidence: How Medicare's Coverage with Evidence Development Rations Care and Exacerbates Inequity, issued by my organization, found that Medicare beneficiaries of color and those living in rural areas are more likely to be denied access under CEDs because the rigid conditions of coverage primarily direct care to

The FDA recently approved a second monoclonal antibody treatment called Leqembi that slowed progression of early Alzheimer's by 27% over an 18-month trial. Many neurologists who were skeptical of the first drug say Leqembi could be a gamechanger.

However, the Alzheimer's community, including the American Academy of Neurology and more than 200 research experts in the space, have had to plead with CMS to revise its extreme Medicare coverage restrictions. So far, CMS has rejected those requests.

As the president notes in his November 2022 Proclamation on National Alzheimer's Disease Awareness Month, "Alzheimer's is common and especially cruel, robbing people of their memories, thoughts, and identity over many years. Across the Nation, this epidemic is growing: In the next 30 years, the number of Americans with Alzheimer's is expected to reach nearly 14 million, straining families and our health care system. Fortunately, we are on the cusp of life-saving advances that can forever change the course of the disease.'

We completely agree. He needs to step in so people living with early Alzheimer's get a fair shot at more time with their families.

LOS ANGELES (CNS) The former operator of the nowdefunct 1-800-GET- THIN ad campaign was sentenced Monday to seven years behind bars for using fabricated sleep studies to persuade insurance companies to pay out tens of millions of dollars for Lap-Band surgery.

Julian Omidi, 54, of West Hollywood, and one of his companies, Beverly Hills-based Surgery Center Management, were found guilty in December 2021 of multiple wire and mail fraud Omidi, a former doctor, also was found guilty of two counts of making false statements relating to health care matters and one count each of aggravated identity theft and money laundering. Additionally, Omidi and SCM were found guilty of one count of conspiracy to commit money laundering, according to the U.S. Attorney's Office.

SCM was sentenced to five years probation. Fines and restitution are to be determined at a hearing in

The Lap-Band is a silicone ring that is surgically implanted around the stomach to discourage overeating. The weight-loss-surgery business was widely advertised on Southern California freeway billboards, radio and television, attracting people desperate to shed excess pounds.

However, before insurance companies would pre-approve the $100,000 surgery, prospective patients had to show they suffered from certain afflictions, including sleep apnea.

Prosecutors told the Los Angeles federal court jury that Omidi created a process that turned "patients into profits" by directing employees to "falsely diagnose patients with a sleep disorder they

The defense argued that Omidi was a victim of a sleep-study con man named Charles Klasky, who "posed as an expert in sleep medicine" and tricked Omidi into prosecutors, Omidi decided every allowing him to oversee the sleepstudy program.

Klasky pleaded guilty to a federal conspiracy charge and was placed on probation last year.

Prosecutors told the jury that patients were harmed as a result of the scheme when they were subjected to unnecessary medical procedures, and that insurance providers were conned out of millions of dollars after receiving fraudulent bills.

Omidi, whose medical license was revoked in 2009, established procedures requiring prospective patients -- even those covered by insurance plans he knew would never cover Lap-Band surgery -- to have at least one sleep study and employees were offered commissions to make sure the studies occurred.

According patient would get a sleep study, and the scheme "got the patients in the door with false promises, gave them false hope, and billed their insurance companies with false

After patients underwent sleep studies -- often with little indication that any doctor had determined the study was necessary -- GET THIN employees, acting at Omidi's direction, falsified the results to reflect that the patient had moderate or severe sleep apnea, and that they suffered from severe daytime sleepiness, the jury found.

Omidi then caused those falsified reports to be used in support of GET THIN's preauthorization requests for Lap-Band surgery, evidence showed.

Relying on the falsified studies, as well as other bogus information, including patients' heights and weights, insurance companies authorized payment for many of the proposed Lap-Band surgeries. Prosecutors said GET THIN received at least $38 million for the Lap-Band procedures.

Even if the insurance company did not authorize the surgery, GET THIN still was able to submit bills for an average of $15,000 for each sleep study, the jury was told during the 48-day trial in downtown Los Angeles. The insurance payments were deposited into bank accounts associated with the GET THIN

Benefit programs victimized by the billing scam include TriCare -- the health care program for service retirees and their families around the world -- and various private insurance companies.

Omidi's mother, Cindy, was sentenced to probation in 2015 after she was convicted of violating laws designed to prevent money laundering.
