SANTA FE SPRINGS - With the 2023 school year completed, it was award season at St. Paul High School and the Athletes of the Year were named for the Swordsmen at the annual senior awards dinner (May 12) at the Doubletree in Whittier.

The recipients were Jazmin Zambrano and Joseph Melendez.

Track and Field was well represented with these awards, as both student-athletes were All-First team runners in the Del Rey and Camino Real Leagues.

Zambrano, who will continue her running career at Hope International University, was All-Camino Real League every year and Melendez was All-Santa Fe League in soccer this year in addition to All-Camino Real League in cross country and track and field. Melendez will continue his soccer career at Cerritos College.

"St. Paul High School is extremely proud of both Jazmin and Joseph as recipients of the Don Ward Athlete of the Year Award," St. Paul Athletic Director Rich Avina said. "These two young athletes have worked extremely hard at their craft and demonstrated integrity and grit during competition. They are great students, as well as athletes and represent St. Paul High School in the greatest fashion."

The Don Ward Outstanding Athlete of the Year Memorial Award was established as a tribute to the character and legacy of a beloved Swordsman, Don Ward, who passed away in September 2021 and was a longtime supporter of St. Paul

"Mr. Ward spent many years taking photographs of our athletes on the field and court," Avina said. "He was a historian that has helped cement the tradition and values as a St. Paul Athlete. He was loved and respected by hundreds and even thousands of athletes that walked the campus at St. Paul from the 70's, 80's, 90's, and 2000's.

"He was a historian. Don Ward represented all that is great in athletics at St. Paul High School – commitment, passion, persistence, but most importantly, Mr. Ward was genuinely a great human being that left his imprint on our community. He changed the world one picture at a time."

The Don Ward Athlete of the Year Award is given to one male and one female senior athlete.

To be eligible to receive this award, the athlete must:

- make a substantial impact to the overall athletic department

- be recognized as contributing to the overall school community in cooperation, Christian service, and attitude.'

Swordsmen Girls Basketball coach, Clarissa Perez, from the 2023 season said of both athletes winning the award: "It's so awesome to see another sport like cross country and track be recognized," she said. "It's awesome to have two runners receive this award. Our school has accomplished that and coming into light having a runner, who is a Mexican-American win this award."

St. Paul Track and Field coach Adam Padilla, who coached both athletes, echoed Perez' thoughts saying, "We are proud of Joe and Jazmin being named Athletes of a football school, gave us great joy to have them both named to this broke down in tears.'

On winning the award, Melendez said, "It feels really good. Our schools' main sports are football and basketball and getting recognition for our sport of cross country and track and $soccer \, is \, overwhelming, \, especially \,$ Zambrano and Melendez were both very surprised when they saw that they had won the award.

"They gave us a pamphlet at the awards, and I saw my name," Melendez explained. "I thought it was a typo. Jazmin also saw her name and came over and said, Joe, did you see that we got the athlete of the year award.'

Zambrano dominates long distance

Zambrano, who qualified for CIF all four years, won the 1600 and 3200 in league three years in track and field, ran cross country and played varsity basketball all four years. She advanced to CIF State and was an All-League runner in cross country.

"It's difficult on top of school, having to compete at that high level, but with your teammates and your coaches it's very capable," Zambrano said. "I've been playing basketball since I was five. It's a family thing. I've always been around sports, but once I got to high school, running became something I was very good at and that became my life in high school."

country and had been trying to qualify for state since her sophomore year. She finally succeeded this past season.

Zambrano previously missed qualifying for state in her junior year by three seconds. "That lit the biggest fire in me," said Zambrano, of the near miss.

Zambrano said of her dad, Jesus, who said to her after she missed the cut for state last year in CIF. "'Remember this feeling,'" she remembered him saying. 'You never want to feel it again.'

That fire was in her this season, as she qualified and recalled the moment it happened.

She ran an even 19:00.

This time, however, they were tears of joy.

Jazz had a PR of 18:30 in a league meet earlier in the season.

"It was such a surreal moment when I qualified for state," she said. "It was an amazing experience to participate in state.' I told my dad I qualified for state, and I cried."

Coach Padilla said of Zambrano: "She has been one of most accomplished runners in the past twenty years," he said. "Jazmin has always been successful in getting to the championships. Unfortunately, in her junior and senior years in track she was sick and wasn't able to compete to her full ability. That was the same result at the state meet. She was hit with the flu (possible covid bug) the week of the state meet. Unfortunately, we never got to see her complete at the end of her years.

"It has been a great joy to watch her compete.'

In her four years, Jazz had a few highlight games from long range. Included in those games was on her senior night, she sank multiple 3-pointers and came away with 17 points.

"It (basketball) was something that I used to get a break from running," she said. "It still has a very special place in my heart as my brother (Jesus) played basketball at St. Paul." Coach Perez and Jesus Zambrano both Jazz, as she also goes by to played at the same time on the friends, ran the 3-mile in cross girls and boys basketball teams, and both graduated in 2015.

> Zambrano was a three-sport athlete and typically didn't have much of a break between seasons.

> In addition to her athlete of the Year Award, Zambrano also received the Outstanding Christian Service Award.

Melendez stars in both soccer and running

The cross-country team won the Santa Fe League and advanced to the CIF Prelims.

Melendez ran cross country for three years – freshman, junior and senior seasons. He helped the team by securing the Camino Real League title and making the top ten All League team from the Camino Real.

He also ran the same three seasons and was dedicated to the 400 and 4x400 relay team.

What they said:

Rich Avina, St. Paul AD: "Jazmin Zambrano has been one of our most tenacious workers over the past four years. Her work is a direct result of her success while competing. She has competed at the highest levels; this includes CIF finals and Masters. She has been at the top of the league in cross country and in track in her events. She also was a major component in the girls basketball program. Joseph Melendez had a tremendous year. First Team All-League in Cross country, then competing in CIF finals. First Team Allleague in soccer on a team that went 10-0 and won a League title. He completed his year winning the league in track, competing in the 400 Meter. Joseph is an extremely talented athlete, but more importantly, he's a great person."

Clarissa Perez, St. Paul Girls Basketball coach (2022-'23): "It's been a joy to coach Jazmin and I look forward to seeing her continue her running Jazz balanced both sports and was able to handle the workload. Coming off the bench in basketball, she was able to help us and do their job. She was trying to do her job as a team leader.

Report: LA leads way on immigrant assistance, but more can be done

By City News Service

LOS ANGELES - While Los Angeles County has made "historic investments" in resources to benefit immigrants, additional efforts are needed to assist immigrants in areas such as college readiness, mental health, affordable housing and help for newly arriving refugees, according to a report released Tuesday.

Supported by Whittier Union teachers, staff and administrators, the newly adopted Land Use Acknowledgement policy actively recognizes and honors the rich history, art and culture of Native Americans. The policy is slated to be integrated into the District's comprehensive Ethnic Studies curriculum, further emphasizing the importance of diverse perspectives and experiences and the statement and school-specific events.

Under the new policy, the District recognizes that each high school campus is located on the traditional land of California tribes advisory committee that will offer guidance, advice, Native protocols and serve as a resource to the District and its school communities.

"Additionally, our commitment to student wellness and health is unwavering. By revisiting our drug policy, we are ensuring that programs are in place to support our students and acknowledge the importance of providing students with preventative support, rather than immediately moving to punitive action. The Board and the District will continue to do Whatever it Takes to ensure the overall success of our students and District community."

Our freedom is slowly eroding

By John Stossel

Every Tuesday at JohnStossel.com, Stossel posts a new video about the battle between government and freedom. He is the author of "Give Me a Break: How I Exposed Hucksters, Cheats, and Scam Artists and Became the Scourge of the Liberal Media."

Politicians claim their bills bring us good things. Free health care! Child care! A cellphone for all!

But government isn't Santa Claus. Government is force.

Most every law takes away a little of our money or freedom or both.

The Heritage Foundation ranks economic freedom across the globe. The United States once ranked No. 4 in the world, but we've been in decline. This year, as my new video explains, we're 25th.

"If you care about living a prosperous life, you should care about what government economic policies are," says The Heritage Foundation's Derrick Morgan.

The foundation ranks countries' economic freedom based on things like rule of law, regulatory efficiency, open markets, fiscal

The big reason the USA fell in the rankings is that Congress spends so much more money than government can squeeze out

I say to Morgan, "'Free child care, free this, free that!' That sounds good for my freedom."

"Sooner or later, you run out of other people's money," Morgan responds. "More dollars chasing fewer goods leads to inflation," and inflation leaves us less financial freedom.

In addition, politicians ban some of our choices, like future ago, China turned Hong Kong into another Chinese police state. natural gas hookups and gas-powered cars. Many want to ban contraception, TikTok, guns.

And on top of that, America's bureaucrats add thousands of regulations, most of which restrict individual freedom.

India ranks toward the bottom of the freedom list because Indian bureaucrats are empowered to decide whether entrepreneurs may try something new. Investors must get up to 70 different approvals. No wonder India stays poor.

It could be worse. The most repressed people in the world are trapped in countries at the bottom of the freedom list: Sudan, Venezuela, Cuba and, of course, North Korea.

'It's bad in the economic sphere just as it is in the political sphere," says Morgan. "These things reinforce each other. The 44th. America 23rd. freer a country is economically, the better off they are."

It happened because Hong Kong's British rulers enforced rule of law but put few obstacles in the way of trying new things.

That allowed free people in Hong Kong to get rich and put Hong Kong at the top of many freedom rankings.

Then the British gave Hong Kong back to China. China promised to respect Hong Kong's open society, but a few years

So Heritage dropped Hong Kong from its list. "We got to the point where we could no longer consider them separate from Communist China, sadly," says Morgan.

The freest countries on Heritage's list are Taiwan, Ireland,

But wait! Singapore doesn't have free speech. You can't The world's least free countries have even more smothering criticize politicians or assemble without a police permit. They recently hanged some people for selling marijuana.

"Would you want to live in Singapore?" I ask Morgan.

"Your point is a good one," he responds. "This isn't a measure of freedom overall. It's a measure of economic freedom. Other freedoms are important, religious freedom ... First Amendment freedom."

The Cato Institute's Human Freedom Index, which ranks both economic and personal freedom, lists Switzerland, New Zealand, Estonia and Denmark as the freest countries. Singapore ranks

What the fat-shamers don't get about Lizzo

By Danielle Pinnock

Danielle Pinnock, an actress, writer and comedian, stars on the CBS sitcom "Ghosts" and is the creator of the one-woman show "Body/ Courage."

I understand why Lizzo took a beat from Twitter.

Last month, the Emmy- and Grammy-winning multihyphenate artist — a classically trained, flute-playing rapper, singer, songwriter, actress and fashion mogul — was under attack (again!) from internet trolls bombarding her with vicious messages about her weight. This time, it got so bad that she locked down her Twitter account, writing, "Y'all don't know how close I be to giving up on everyone and quitting.

Lizzo embraces inclusivity for everyone who has a body. She chants the mantra of body positivity for all humans, not just the fat ones. Her songs, including "Good as Hell" and "Truth Hurts," have resonated with millions of people as anthems of empowerment and self-acceptance. She lives freely and unapologetically, whether twerking on the beach with her besties or modeling stylish crop tops from her shapewear brand Yitty.

But for years, Lizzo has faced backlash from people made uncomfortable by her unabashed acceptance of herself — who would rather see her concealed in oversize cardigans and potato

"What about her weight?" people say. "She's promoting obesity!"

No, she isn't. There's a difference between endorsing obesity and practicing self-love.

When most people think of obesity, perhaps they think of skyrocketing BMIs. Or overweight people with chronic diseases.

follows people who are morbidly obese as they sink into bed encased by pizzas, or "The Biggest Loser," which exploited subjected to physical abuse in childhood and adulthood. It has people with weight challenges for entertainment and profit even as contestants developed eating disorders and struggled to keep the weight off once the cameras turned away.

Lizzo is not promoting any of that. She's just trying to exist while lifting others up.

I've witnessed live concerts where she passionately sings, raps, plays the flute and dances. Her mic is on every night. It takes an astonishing amount of athleticism to perform like this. I challenge her trolls to go on tour with her for even a day to see if they could physically sustain a three-hour set.

"But why is she still fat?" people insist.

Should she share her bloodwork on Instagram? If it shows no issues, what will they say then? And if she does have underlying conditions — is that their chance to say, "Gotcha"?

I want to know: Why do people care?

As someone who has gained and lost and gained weight again, I can tell you: The process is hellish.

At 16 years old, I lost 50 pounds by living on protein bars and diuretics; I received celebration and praise. Then my father died, and in my grief, I gained twice the weight I'd lost. For decades, I struggled to reach an elusive number on the scale, binge eating and battling bulimia. I have tried every diet imaginable, including the notorious "Weigh Down" scam, which encourages people to pray away their hunger.

When I see the doctor, I must strenuously advocate for myself because physicians assume all my ailments stem from my size. Recently, my toenail split because of gel nail polish; my doctor prescribed Ozempic.

My body has endured all manner of suffering. It has been weathered miscarriages and the challenges of dermatomyositis, which causes muscle weakness and rashes. Worth noting: Most of these traumatic events occurred when I was "skinny."

Fat people know obesity is the leading killer in the United States. I know people have traumas attached to fatness. But you know what doesn't help? All the vitriol directed toward fat Lizzo is out to counter the judgment and shaming. She is public about what she eats (she's vegan) and how often she exercises. She posts details of her routine to TikTok, not to proselytize but to show people how to love themselves.

Lizzo got me back in the gym. Seeing someone who looks like me, not ashamed or hating her body while exercising, changed my entire perspective on fitness. "It may come as a surprise to some of y'all that I'm not working out to have your ideal body type," she says in one video. "I'm working out to have my ideal body type. And you know what type that is? None of your f---ing business. Because I am beautiful, I am strong, I do my job."

Trying to be strong, to heal, to express ourselves, to do our jobs — this is what all of us deserve to be able to do, without hostility and insults raining down on us.

Lizzo has unlocked her Twitter account again. I'm glad she paused to take care of herself. And if the next time this happens, she takes more than a beat? That's okay, sis. You pour so much out, so let me pour into you: You are worthy and powerful. A gift to this world. Don't let the haters get you down.

The myth that doomed the Titan

By Naomi Oreskes

Naomi Oreskes is a professor of the history of science at Harvard and the author of numerous books, including "Science on a Mission: How Military Funding Shaped What We Do and Don't Know About the Ocean" and "The Biq Myth: How American Business Taught Us to Loathe Government and Love the Free Market.'

As details emerged about the implosion last week of the Titan submersible in its descent to the wreck of the Titanic nearly two and a half miles below the surface of the North Atlantic, there was widespread anger that its owner and pilot knowingly took civilians on an uncertified vessel to a depth of crushing pressure.

The billionaire investor Ray Dalio, who founded the ocean exploration company OceanX with his son, Mark, expressed what he described on Twitter as his "great anger." He accused Stockton Rush, the chief executive of OceanGate, who was piloting the Titan, of "reckless disregard for tried-and-true safety protocols that have made manned submersible exploration extremely safe." Within the oceanography community, that view was

Mr. Rush, trained as an aerospace engineer, had justified his decision not to have his vessel certified for safety by arguing that the regulatory process stifled growth and innovation.

"At some point, safety just is pure waste," Mr. Rush said in an interview with David Pogue of CBS. He even suggested that safety was used as an excuse by "industry players who try to use a safety argument to stop innovation." OceanGate put it this way on its website: "By definition, innovation is outside of an already accepted system.

In Mr. Rush's telling, innovation was the province of maverick individuals, not stodgy legacy players and certainly not cumbersome government bureaucracies. Mr. Rush was perpetuating a myth — one that is particularly popular in Silicon Valley and among technology start-ups — that governments are just an obstacle and that innovation comes from bold trailblazers moving fast and breaking things.

The first two deep-diving submersibles built in America were developed by the United States government and the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution to assist in salvage operations at sea and to install and monitor Cold War underwater listening systems, including the original version of the system that detected the implosion of the Titan.

In the 1930s, civilian oceanographers were studying a layer in the ocean where temperatures and pressures channeled sound in a way that enabled it to travel very far. Realizing this could be a powerful military communications tool, they worked with the U.S. Navy to develop technologies that exploited this sound channel. The most important of these technologies was SOSUS the Sound Surveillance System — a complex network of listening devices called hydrophones on the sea floor designed to detect prowling Soviet submarines.

By the late 1950s, SOSUS encompassed more than 1,000 hydrophones and 30,000 miles of undersea cables and could detect sounds hundreds of miles away. But this network required monitoring, inspections and repairs. In the early 1960s, scientists and engineers at Woods Hole collaborated with the U.S. Office of Naval Research and the U.S. Navy Bureau of Ships to conceptualize in the private sector, but it was the government, not the private and commission two radically innovative vessels to do that work: Aluminaut and Alvin.

As its name suggests, Aluminaut was developed with the Reynolds Metals Company, one of the largest aluminum companies in the world. It was expensive — the original expected cost was $3 million for construction and two years of operation — but the Navy was willing to take the risk, given the potential rewards. What the Navy and Woods Hole were not willing to do, however, was to risk lives. A Woods Hole engineer, James Mavor Jr., stressed that while Aluminaut was experimental, it still needed to be designed and tested as a "future operating vehicle." No one wanted an experiment once people were in it underwater.

Aluminaut was not a success; the parties involved in its

That story is often wrong, and it was 100 percent wrong in this development could not agree on terms and parted ways. But a different submersible, Alvin, did succeed. In 1962, Woods Hole put out a call for bids for a titanium-hulled submersible; the winner was the electronics division of General Mills. Mostly known as a cereal maker, General Mills was in fact a highly innovative company. Among its developments was a black box flight data recorder in partnership with the University of Minnesota.

> The contract called for Alvin to be built in less than a year so that it could be used in the scheduled installation of a new underwater listening system in Bermuda, but a scientific advisory committee warned about the risks of rushing: "While the delivery date is important for accomplishment of a particular mission, failure to meet the time requirement will not prejudice the general usefulness of the vehicle.'

> The committee was right. General Mills missed the deadline for the Bermuda project, but Alvin went on to play leading roles in the agonizing effort in 1966 to recover a lost H-bomb from the Mediterranean Sea and the scientific discovery of complex biological communities at deep-sea hydrothermal vents. While Alvin has endured various accidents and incidents over its long career, no one has ever died in it.

> Like the internet, submersible technology was commercialized sector, that took the initial risks. The key participants were not disrupters; they were seasoned professionals working inside established institutions, including the industrial giants Reynolds Metals and General Mills, and the giant government bureaucracy that was the U.S. Navy Bureau of Ships, now called the Naval Sea

> Critics may argue that regulations have of late become more cumbersome, which may be true. But the history of submersibles proves that innovation can develop in many contexts and without putting lives at risk. And the loss of the Titan proves that even in a mature industry, you still need regulation. Regulation may slow things down, but it also saves lives. Sometimes slowing down is a good thing.

California's homelessness crisis is homegrown, UC study finds

By Angela Hart

SACRAMENTO

California's homelessness crisis is a homegrown problem that is deepening amid a shortage of affordable housing and emergency shelter, and it's often the brutal conditions of living on the street that trigger behavioral health problems, such as depression and anxiety, researchers found in a comprehensive study on homelessness.

The new findings by leading researchers at the University of California show that at least 90% of adults who are experiencing homelessness in the state became homeless while living in California due primarily to the dire lack of affordable housing.

"This idea that homeless people are rushing into California is just not true," said Margot Kushel, a physician who treats homeless people and the lead investigator of the study for the UC-San Francisco Benioff Homelessness and Housing Initiative. "There's so much myth-making around this magnet theory that people who are homeless flock to California, but this is our own problem."

"These are our own policies," Kushel added, referring to the state and federal governments. "We did this to people."

An estimated 172,000 people are homeless in California, the largest homeless population of any state in the U.S. and 30% of the nation's total, even though California has just 12% of the population. Researchers believe the way the state measures homelessness, though important, represents an undercount because cities and counties tallying their homeless populations in just one day miss people who may be hidden and living in their cars, for

The homelessness study went further than annual pointin-time counts by analyzing the experiences of 3,200 homeless adults age 18 and older from October 2021 to November 2022, then conducted in-depth interviews with some participants to gain a better understanding of the state's overall crisis.

California Health and Human Services Secretary Mark Ghaly, who asked for an analysis of the state's homelessness crisis, said the findings underscore where it must improve. The study could inform the state's approach to expanding its behavioral health

"As we drive toward addressing the health and housing needs of Californians experiencing homelessness, this study reinforces the importance of comprehensive and integrated supports," Ghaly said in a statement. "California is taking bold steps to address unmet needs for physical and behavioral health services, to create a range of housing options that are safe and stable, and to meet people Getty Images where they are."

Democratic Gov. Gavin Newsom and state health officials are steering initiatives that include a 2024 ballot measure to expand treatment for mental health and addiction, including building more residential treatment facilities. Newsom is also leading a new program under the Community Assistance, Recovery and Empowerment Act, known as CARE courts, to move people into court-ordered treatment. And the administration is seeking to add rent payments as a health care benefit available to low-income Californians on Medi-Cal.

Kushel said the findings point to the increasing demands for adequate mental health and addiction treatment — and more low-income housing. While some people reported heightened mental health and substance use problems before becoming homeless after leaving an vulnerable populations, including homeless, the trauma of being on the streets, Kushel said, can lead to, or amplify, behavioral health conditions, including drug use and depression.

A staggering 82% of people homelessness experiencing said they had a mental health condition or substance use challenge in their lifetime. And 66% said they were currently experiencing mental health problems, such as depression, anxiety, hallucinations, or trouble remembering things.

"I think that speaks to the despair that people experience," Kushel said.

Sage Johnson, 28, was homeless in Los Angeles and lived for years in shelters before getting into low-income housing. Despite working graveyard shifts at homelessness, 32% had a mortgage or rental lease agreement; roughly 50% did not.

Researchers unhoused many people have encountered violence, contributing to the crisis: 72% reported physical violence in their lifetime and 24% said they had experienced sexual violence. Sexual violence was more common among women and transgender or nonbinary individuals.

The homeless population is aging; 47% of all adults Walgreens and other minimum- surveyed were 50 or older. The findings show the limits control," Johnson said, who was of California's unprecedented spending to combat its homelessness crisis. Newsom's administration has poured more than $20 billion into the crisis since he took office in 2019, much of that distributed to local governments to provide services and build housing.

That's on top of billions the The median length of state is pouring into improving homelessness was 22 months. In its mental health system and a the six months before becoming $$12$ billion social services-based homeless, people had earned a initiative called CalAIM, which independent service of the median monthly income of $960. offers housing security deposits California Health Care Roughly 1 in 5 became and sobering centers to help Foundation.

4 people, including 3 Marines, killed homeless people.

But the study found that expanding health coverage and adding social services isn't serving all those in need. Specifically, 83% of homeless people surveyed experiencing said they had health insurance mostly through Medi-Cal, California's Medicaid program for low-income people. Yet more than half relied on the emergency room for care and nearly a quarter said they couldn't access the care they needed. A majority who said they were experiencing mental health problems either weren't being treated or got care through emergency rooms.

> In some ways, the policies Newsom is steering may make the problem worse. For example, his administration has backed removing homeless encampments in exchange for shelter and services. But homeless people say those promises are often unmet.

> Forced displacement, the of belongings when clearing encampments can hurt the state's ability to find housing for people, Kushel said.

"It sometimes feels like one part of government is working against the other part," she said. "We're frantically trying to get people their documents so they can move into housing, and then somebody else throws it all away. That's not helpful."
