High school custodians are understaffed, union says

■ Employees expressed concerns over custodial staffing and transportation conditions within the Norwalk-La Mirada district.

By Vincent Medina Contributor

NORWALK – Faculty from the Norwalk La Mirada Unified School District expressed their frustration over staffing shortages at district high schools during the board of education meeting on Monday.

Martha Jauregui, president of the Norwalk-La Mirada chapter of the California School Employees Association (CSEA), and several district faculty members expressed concerns about the staffing levels of custodians in district high

She explained John Glenn High School removed two fulltime custodial positions, and La Mirada and Norwalk High School also removed one fulltime position. The CSEA chapter president emphasized the need for additional full-time custodian positions to address the workload adequately.

"[John Glenn] has three night custodians, and on Aug. 18, they had a dance, three volleyball games and a football game," Jauregui said. "Three custodians are not going to clean that stadium with all those events, on top of maintaining and cleaning all classrooms, the MPR, gym and the

She expressed that custodians were asked to work overtime after significant events to assist with clean-up. Jaurgui called on the district to hire additional full-time position custodians needed to fulfill the needs of the high schools.

Robert Lopez is a full-time custodian in the district and expressed the need for additional assistance at La Mirada High School during the construction of the athletic facilities.

"We had been told that after the construction was finished the need for an additional full-time custodian would be reevaluated," Lopez said. "The evaluation is not necessary, having to share custodians between different high schools is unfair and unreasonable."

Disney jazz show coming to Downey

■ Special guest singers from across Disney movies and tv shows will sing reimagined versions of classic songs.

By Alex Dominguez

DOWNEY – Some of Disney's classic tunes will be jazzed up by some of the voices behind the entertainment company's famous characters at a show coming to Downey in September.

"Swingin' with the Mouse" will take the stage at the Downey Theatre on Friday, Sept. 29 at 8

Producer and musical arranger Pablo Rossil described the project as an "independent Disney Jazz collective."

"Basically, we take Disney music and we write completely new arrangements in order to present them in a new light, as sort of a genre bend," said Rossil. "This show specifically is a larger version of what we have done in the past in cabaret spaces."

Singers will be accompanied by a six-piece band.

"Within jazz, nuch like in Disney, there is a varied group of styles you can do. We have swing, we have Latin rhythms like bossa, salsas, and cumbias. We have straight aheads, we have stuff in traditional time signatures, different keys. We switch up the tempos of things, so a little faster, a little slower," said Rossil. "If you think about it, Disney is an American company, jazz is an American artform, and it just blends so well together.

"The same successes and problems that came with the birth and the life of jazz as we know it now are similar to the ones that Disney went through as a company. That may be a private company and jazz is a genre, but there are so many parallels to be found between two American

Audiences will not only enjoy refreshed versions of some of their favorite Disney tunes, they'll be hearing them from a handful of familiar faces and

"The special thing about this show is we're going to have some really cool guests that are actually originators of certain characters in shows and movies in the Disney canon," said Rossil.

Garrett Clayton played surfer boy heartthrob "Tanner" in Disney Channel's Teen Beach Movie. He is one of seven special guest singers that have been announced.

Clayton said that the show is "going to be beautiful."

"Even if you jump into a previously stenciled piece of material, the thing that real jazz lovers know is that if there's not freedom in, maybe there's a scatting moment, or you're allowed to change the notes a little bit, or if you're on one of the instruments there's built out breathed moments where it's your turn to fly," said Clayton. "I think that's my favorite part of it, is everybody is allowed to shine in this, and after the first time I did this, I fell in love with that aspect because collaboration, and healthy collaboration is one of my favorite things.'

He said that he looks forward to seeing the audience's reactions to "all these new surprises in the music for them."

"I love the rendition of 'Cruella De Vil,' it's always a smash hit with the audience. Even with 'Poor Unfortunate Souls', the way that they've been almost taken apart and restructured, I think it's such a cool way to approach these songs and no one has heard these songs this way before, which is why I always love seeing people's reactions when they see," said Clayton. "You know, they open it up and you see them and they're like, 'Oh yeah, I know what this is.' But when they see what you've done to it and how it's really like its own, it's like a love letter to it, people's eyes light up and they get really excited.'

Joining Clayton will be Keith David ("Dr. Facilier" in The Princess and The Frog and "Goliath" in Gargoyles), Deedee Magno Hall (The All-New Mickey Mouse Club), Leah Lewis ("Ember" in Elemental), Kaitlyn Robrock (the voice of "Minnie Mouse"), Jennifer Stone ("Harper" in Wizards of Waverly Place), and Richard White ("Gaston" in Beauty and the Beast).

Rossil said that the show is "unifying."

"It's finding a common denominator, something that a lot of people enjoy, and letting them celebrate it for two hours," said Rossil. "It's like a convention. Honestly, I've never thought of it this way, but it's like a convention. You're gathering a lot of people that care about a certain subject, you're giving them content that is exclusive to those two hours in life, and someday, somebody is going to be able to say 'I saw the guy that was a Disney star in the 2000's and that was a Disney star in the '80s in the same room at the same time, and they made

He said that "there's always a connection to that material."

"Kids that grew up in the '90s had Toy Story, had Lion King, had the Disney renaissance. People who grew up in the '60s had those princesses. Even grandparents and greatgrandparents now had Mickey Mouse in the '20s and '30s," said Rossil. "It's always been around. Of course, Disney always comes with that tag of 'kid,' but in reality, we're all kids."

DOMESTIC TERRORISM

order at: petergazerro@yahoo.com

The new Domestic Terrorism, Mind Control

What is happening is a mind controlling of people. This is the most dangerous thing anyone could have done to them. Mind controlling by terrorist is very dangerous because the people being affected are unaware, they are under a mind controlling spell. I began noticing the mental change with my friends around June 2022. It began with Officer Nadal from the Signal Hill Police Department. Nadal and his police friends tried to sneak up on me and enter my house. I was gone on that day. He tried again. I looked out the window. I wouldn't let him in my house. I told him I would speak with him when I hired a lawyer. Since that time, I've been unable to hire a lawyer. I'm still trying to hire a lawyer. I spoke with lawyers that will take my money. Then they make up excuses why they won't work for me. This is in my book: Donald Trump's Koward Kommunist Kts.

I tried many different ways to advertise my political book, The Washington Mafia. The book is PG rated. The Long Beach newspaper, the beachcomber, was the only newspaper that I could get into to place an ad. The Downey Patriot is the second newspaper that would let me place an ad.

The mind controlling of people affects my family and friends. I can't talk about my book. I'm hated by everyone. I'm afraid of speaking with the police about this. I tried talking with the Washington DC Capitol Police, twice. The Signal Hill Police Department are terrorist. I told the Signal Hill City Council about their police. They did nothing. The Signal Hill City Council are terrorist. All the lawyers that have been mind controlled, turn their backs on me. Everyone that has been affected by this mind control won't, or can't, talk to me about my book. Once you're affected, or infected, it's terminal. It's very dangerous. I have evidence since April 2022 of what I'm writing here about. I have tried every day to contact higher law enforcement to help me with this. I'm asking everyone reading here to get me the California Attorney General Rob Bonta and every higher-level law enforcement. This communism, and terrorism, are real. It has to be exposed. It has to be stopped. It is very dangerous to everyone.

North Atlantic whales need our help

By Gib Brogan

Gib Brogan is a campaign director at Oceana, an advocacy organization, where he leads the effort to protect North Atlantic right whales and improve the management of US fisheries.

North Atlantic right whales and speeding boats just don't mix. When a boat strikes a North Atlantic right whale, it can cause traumatic injuries and even death. With only around 340 of these whales remaining along the East Coast of the United States and Canada, they are on the brink of extinction.

Boat strikes and fishing gear entanglements are top threats to these critically endangered whales. Scientists estimate the species can only recover if less than one North Atlantic right whale dies per year from these human causes. They have been listed as endangered under the Endangered Species Act since 1970.

These whales live in a constant state of danger, navigating a jungle of an estimated 1 million fishing lines and busy shipping lanes from their calving grounds in the US Southeast to their summer grounds in New England and north into Canada. If all of that weren't enough, this whale is hard to see because it is dark in color, lacks a dorsal fin and is vulnerable because it swims near the water's surface.

Studies have found that a boat's speed is a major factor in boat-related collisions with North Atlantic right whales, with speeds of 10 knots (11.5 mph) or less reducing a whale's risk of death by 80% to 90%. At high speeds, captains cannot maneuver to avoid them, and the whales swim too slowly to move out of the way.

To reduce the threat of boat strikes to these whales, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in 2008 issued a vessel speed rule to establish mandatory seasonal slow zones for boats 65 feet in length or greater in areas where the whales were expected, and short-term voluntary slow zones triggered by whale sightings. The speed limit of 10 knots (11.5 mph) was set to reduce the risk of a boat killing a whale.

right whales are spending more time in the colder waters in this point, any setback risks pushing the right whales over Canada and different parts of US waters so these seasonal the edge of extinction. With only 340 whales left, we don't slow zones no longer match when whales are present. Over have much more time to save these whales. time, it's become clear that even smaller boats can kill North Atlantic right whales.

In February 2021, a male calf, only about a month old, was killed by a 54-foot sport fishing boat. This calf died activities — boats 65 feet and larger have been subject to from the severe trauma of the boat's propeller cutting the slow zones along the East Coast for 15 years. These deep into its back, a fractured skull and crushed ribs. The zones simply update the existing seasonal slow zones calf's mother, known as "Infinity" to whale researchers, with newer information about when and where whales are was also struck and reportedly has not been seen since she expected, improve how the 15-day slow zones are triggered was spotted a few days afterward with cuts. This collision when whales are spotted in certain areas and ensure that shows how dangerous strikes from smaller boats can be. boats must comply with the speed limits. And these slow To save these whales from extinction, NOAA must extend the speed limits to smaller boats, not just large ships.

After an extensive review of the current vessel speed rule, NOAA proposed updates last year to protect these whales better. At the time, NOAA said, "During the past two and a half years alone NOAA Fisheries has documented four lethal (death and serious injury) right whale vessel strike events in US waters. These events are impeding the species' recovery and contributing to the population's decline."

NOAA allowed months of public review and accepted comments through October 2022. The agency has advised the White House that it expects to finish reviewing these comments and take final action by this December.

The proposed changes make sense: Adjust the location of the seasonal slow zones to where the whales are located now compared with 2008; apply the speed limits to boats 35 feet in length and up; shift the short-term voluntary speed zones triggered by whale sightings to mandatory zones, among other updates.

But there has been recent controversy around NOAA's proposed changes. Some members of Congress have proposed delays to finalizing these slow zones. Although

Our oceans have changed since 2008. North Atlantic none of these delays has moved forward in Congress at Despite assertions from recreational fishing and boating enthusiasts, these slow zones are not new and do not close access to the Atlantic Ocean or prohibit these zones are only in effect when the whales pass through on their migratory path from Florida to Canada and back each year. This speed rule needs to apply to smaller boats that can and do kill whales.

In NOAA's proposal, the updated slow zones remain seasonal and temporary, with almost all of these slow zones (except a smaller zone near Nantucket and Georges Bank that runs through the end of June) having no impact on most US boaters between Memorial Day and Labor Day - the most popular boating months — as most of the whales are in Canada during those times.

When it comes to boater safety, the current and proposed updated vessel speed rule will not put boaters at risk or in danger. Boaters are exempt from the speed limit if safety is on the line, such as if a storm is approaching or a warning for high winds is issued. The proposed changes offer expanded exemptions compared with the original 2008 rule for situations that present a threat to the health, safety or life of a person.

We can save this critically endangered whale from extinction, but it requires action now. The North Atlantic right whales are running out of time.

The GOP strategy on reproductive rights isn't working

By Mary Ziegler

Mary Zielger is a law professor at UC Davis. She is the author of "Dollars for Life: The Antiabortion Movement and the Fall of the Republican Establishment" and "Roe: The History of a National Obsession."

The South Carolina Supreme Court's recent abortion decision is a reminder of the importance of state constitutional law in the post-Roe era. By upholding a sixweek ban virtually identical to one struck down by the same court in January, this ruling means that South Carolina will go from a state that welcomed abortion seekers from across the region to one where the procedure is available for only as little as a week after a person confirms a pregnancy.

But the court's decision — and the legislative strategy behind the law that the court upheld — is also a perfect reflection of an evolving Republican strategy to push back on abortion: paying lip service to the importance of reproductive liberty with exceptions or rhetorical underlying interest that state lawmakers — and their strategy either. Leading groups, like Students for Life and flourishes while offering no real access at all.

South Carolina Republicans suffered a setback in January when a differently constituted supreme court struck down a prior six-week ban in a 3-2 decision. Writing for the majority, Judge Kaye Hearn, the only woman on the court, stressed that Dobbs, the case that overturned South Carolina constitution expressly includes a right to

While requiring that a privacy-based abortion right "be balanced against the State's interest in protecting unborn life," the court insisted that a six-week ban did not offer Republicans are trying to navigate the post-Roe era. Step "a reasonable period of time" for a patient to learn they were pregnant and make arrangements to terminate a the idea of freedom to make reproductive decisions. We've pregnancy.

But then Hearn retired, and the state legislature which chooses state supreme court judges in the state — replaced her with a male conservative justice, creating the only all-male state supreme court in the nation. With a more conservative court in place, the Republican legislature and governor then went back to the drawing board, tweaking the old six-week ban to claim that a virtually identical bill was a compassionate compromise between the rights of women and other abortion seekers and the state's interest in fetal life.

Other conservative states have gone about this in different ways: emphasizing rape or incest exceptions while failing to mention the fine print. For instance, West Virginia's law sets an expiration date for sexual assault victims; other states require sexual assault victims to make a report to law enforcement. Some of these exceptions reproductive choice from any meaningful access to aren't exceptions at all but defenses for carrying out an abortion — to establish that people have a right to choose emergency State lawmakers stressed that contraceptives (like other methods of family planning) were not impacted by the ban. Couples had a reasonable

This show of compassion barely concealed the colleagues on the bench — had in mind. In a 4-1 decision the Alliance Defending Freedom, have stepped up their upholding the new law, the court emphasized that the demands of the GOP, insisting, for example, that the federal law was reasonable because of the importance of "unborn life." No longer did the court frame the fight as pitting the liberal abortion laws unconstitutional. Acknowledging the rights of patients against the state's interest in fetal life.

Instead, the new majority insisted that women's rights Roe, did not dictate the outcome of the case because "the had to give way to "the interest of the unborn child to live." This language suggests that a fetus might have its own constitutional rights or interests — and may count as a freestanding person under the state's constitution.

> The court's decision offers a window into how some one requires manifesting concern for women, and even seen this most clearly in former South Carolina Gov. and now GOP presidential candidate Nikki Haley's talking points on abortion — and her calls for understanding the plight faced by patients.

> Something similar has been argued in Idaho, a state that passed the nation's first ban on out-of-state travel to get an abortion. The so-called "abortion trafficking" law for minors is so sweeping that it arguably applies to people helping abortion seekers in states where the procedure is legal. Idaho lawmakers argue that the law actually protects minors' freedom to decide by shielding them from coercive adults who are not their parents. Leading antiabortion groups, like Students for Life, argue that women do not need abortion (or even birth control) to achieve their

Step two is to separate the abstract importance of abortion — which a doctor has to prove apply rather than whether they use birth control or simply stop having sex.

The final move is to make this show of compassion South Carolina lawmakers tried a different approach: by subtly building toward the recognition of fetal rights arguing that their ban didn't trespass on reproductive or personhood. Of course women have privacy rights, the South Carolina Supreme Court explained. But the unborn child's rights take precedence — and do so early

It's not clear that this plan will work for most Republicans chance to make reproductive decisions by using birth in the post-Dobbs era. To begin with, most Americans will control and emergency contraceptives and by relying on not easily swallow that reproductive freedom doesn't have "early pregnancy testing." That a six-week ban would anything to do with abortion, or even contraception. Most likely kick in before some patients know they are pregnant polls suggest that Americans don't support the idea of made no difference. If the state gave women the means abortion later in pregnancy, but bans early in pregnancy to avoid pregnancy, that satisfied the state's interest in remain deeply unpopular, regardless of how they are

> It's not obvious that antiabortion activists will buy this Constitution already recognizes fetal rights and makes bare idea of reproductive privacy may not sit well with a movement that expects Republicans to deliver precisely what the movement wants.

> Ultimately, strategies like the one evident in South Carolina are unlikely to dig the GOP out of the hole it dug for itself. Republicans remain beholden to base voters, many of them White conservative evangelicals, who are more likely to favor a national ban and have made up a strong part of the party's support. At the same time, it won't be easy to fool a majority of voters who have lived a year with criminal abortion bans and don't like what they see. And voters don't like it when Republicans try to pretend that they aren't interested in sweeping criminal bans when the opposite is true.

> Just look at what happened in Ohio, a deeply conservative state, where Republicans tried to make it harder for voters to change the state's constitution by requiring that an amendment on the ballot have supermajority support. Republicans knew that in November, voters would get to weigh in on a proposed abortion amendment, and that well over half of Ohioans favored that measure in polls. The effort to hoodwink Ohio voters backfired, and they soundly rejected the Republican attempt.

> If the plan is to trick Americans into thinking the party has found a compromise on abortion, Republicans aren't trying very hard. Real compassion can't be all talk and no

Paging Dr. Frischer...

y Dr. Alan Frischer

Exercise is a big part of my life. I run marathons, which is, yes, a bit extreme.

Exercise is considered any movement that makes the muscles work and burns calories. When we don't use our muscles, they turn into fat. Muscles work, and fat sits there. Trust me; I'm a doctor, and every single day in my office I observe that people do indeed age differently, and that much of that depends on their level of activity. Some form of regular exercise is necessary for good health. It is NOT optional.

Many people have physical limitations, preventing them from participating in certain activities. It is fortunate that exercise can take a wide variety of forms, including walking, swimming, running, jogging, dancing, yoga, Pilates, bicycling, hiking, calisthenics, stair climbing, and many other gym activities or movements. The simplest of these is walking, an activity that most of us do already. Exercise does not have to involve speed, rigor or a paid gym membership.

What does exercise do for us?

Exercise can make us feel happier. Need an emotional lift? Need to de-stress after a demanding day? A brisk walk or a visit to the gym can help to improve mood and to decrease feelings of depression, anxiety, and stress. It can increase brain sensitivity to serotonin and norepinephrine, hormones which relieve feelings of depression. Exercise can increase the production of endorphins, which help to produce positive feelings. These effects likely exist regardless of the level of intensity of the workout.

Exercise will help to lose weight. Our bodies expend energy by digesting food, exercising, and maintaining body functions like heartbeat, breathing, and the activity of all working cells. When we diet, the reduced calorie intake lowers the metabolic rate, which can actually cause a temporary delay in weight loss. However, with regular exercise, our metabolic rate is increased, so we burn calories at a higher rate. This occurs both while we are exercising, and afterwards as well. Conversely, inactivity is a major factor in weight gain.

Exercise helps to build and maintain muscles by releasing hormones that enable them to absorb amino acids. This helps muscles grow, and reduces breakdown. As we age, we tend to lose muscle mass and function, which can lead to an increased risk of injury. Regular physical activity is essential in order to slow muscle loss and maintain strength. It also builds bone density when we are young, and helps to maintain it later on.

Exercise can increase our energy level. Aerobic exercise boosts the cardiovascular system and improves lung function. Moving more causes the heart to pump more blood, delivering more oxygen to our muscles. Regular exercise makes our heart, and therefore our muscles, more efficient. Over time, less energy is required to perform the same activities. This makes us less likely to become short of breath, even for those with chronic or terminal diseases.

Exercise can reduce the risk of chronic disease. It improves insulin sensitivity, heart health, and body composition. It can delay or prevent type 2 diabetes, and helps those with type 1 diabetes. It can reduce the risk of a number of cancers. Regular exercise can increase HDL (good cholesterol), while maintaining or reducing LDL (bad) cholesterol. Regular aerobic exercise can lower blood pressure. A lack of exercise can, in contrast, lead to significant increases in belly fat, which increases the risk for diabetes and heart disease.

Exercise helps the skin by facilitating the production of antioxidants, which repair skin damage.

Exercise is good for brain health and memory. It increases our heart rate, which promotes the flow of blood and oxygen to the brain. It can stimulate hormones that enhance the growth of brain cells. It has been shown to cause the hippocampus to grow in size, which may help to improve mental function as we grow older. It may be protective although more research is needed to prove this.

Exercise improves sleep quality and can help with relaxation. The energy loss that occurs during exercise stimulates restorative processes during sleep. The increase in body temperature that occurs during exercise is thought to improve sleep quality by helping our body temperature to drop when we sleep. Some studies show that regular exercise helps us to fall asleep more quickly.

Exercise can reduce pain. For many years, the treatment for chronic pain has been rest. Studies now show that many different conditions (including low back pain, fibromyalgia and soft tissue injuries) can actually be helped by regular exercise. Exercise has been shown to raise pain tolerance and to decrease pain perception.

Finally, exercise can promote a better sex life and boost sex drive, because it strengthens the heart, improves blood circulation, tones muscles, and enhances flexibility. Several studies confirm that regular exercise improves erectile function in men.

What's the best kind of exercise? It is the kind that you will actually do, and stick with. Please consider that exercise can be fun. Find the type that you enjoy, whether it is outdoors, or in the gym. Get to know other people who enjoy doing what you do. Be sociable, and allow your physical activity to connect you to family and friends. Think dance class, water aerobics, or a hike; join a soccer team or a mixed softball league.

It is so clear that exercise can improve nearly every aspect of our health, both physically and emotionally. It takes minimal movement to make a difference. A goal for a week might start at 90 minutes (30 minutes three times per week) of moderate activity. I urge you to begin today in order to feel better, have more energy, and possibly add years to your life. Any amount of activity is better than none at all.

Please check with your doctor when starting something new, especially if you have any concerns about your fitness, haven't exercised in a long time, or have chronic health problems, such as heart disease, diabetes or arthritis.
