Paging Dr. Frischer...

By Dr. Alan Frischer

We've been paying so much (quite warranted) attention to COVID that we sometimes forget that there are other viruses out there. Respiratory Syncytial Virus (RSV) can be a serious and fatal illness for infants and for older adults.

RSV has long been considered a disease of the very young. We now know differently. It is common and highly contagious. Most people have mild, cold-like symptoms, and recover in a week or two, but infants and older adults can develop severe RSV and need hospitalization. Each year in the United States, over two million adults over age 65 become ill with RSV, some 177,000 are hospitalized, and about 14,000 die.

For several years now, researchers have been working on a vaccine to protect against this virus. Finally, this year, the FDA has approved Arexvy, from GlaxoSmithKline (GSK), as well as Abrysvo, from Pfizer, for those 60 and older. In addition, Abrysvo was given approval for use in pregnant women who are 32 to 36 weeks along.

Adults at increased risk for RSV should consider getting one of these RSV vaccines. This would include seniors; those with chronic lung disease, heart disease, kidney or liver disease or diabetes mellitus; those who reside in nursing homes or other long-term care facilities; pregnant women; and those who are moderately or severely immunocompromised.

These new RSV vaccines are safe and very effective. I urge you to speak with your doctor about whether it is appropriate for you.

Dr. Frischer is former chief of staff and former chief of medicine at Downey Regional Medical Center. Write to him in care of this newspaper at 10927 Downey Ave., Suite C, Downey, CA 90241.

Downey pediatrician offers Halloween safety advice

■ Simple tips can help keep children safe while trick-or-treating.

DOWNEY – Now that COVID-19 is less of a threat due to a majority of Californians being vaccinated, we're likely to see more ghosts, goblins and witches walking down neighborhood streets this Halloween, as trick-or-treating is expected to be a common sight in communities across Southern California.

For parents, keeping children safe during this festive holiday will be a main priority. Dr. Ann H. Kang, a pediatrician with Kaiser Permanente Downey, notes that although parents may feel more at ease having their children trick-or-treat this Halloween, there are important safety precautions they need to follow to avoid injury and illness.

She stressed the importance of children being up-to-date with their COVID-19 and flu vaccines. Additionally, she described seven scary health hazards parents should be familiar with to ensure families have a safe and happy Halloween this year.

Food allergies

When it comes to candy, peanuts and other foods, it's always important to read labels and avoid treats without labels. For parents whose children have severe allergic reactions to certain foods, it's important to carry an epinephrine auto-injector if prescribed.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, food allergies account for 35% to 50% of all cases of severe, potentially life-threatening allergic reactions that can occur up to two hours of ingestion of food, such as peanuts.

Hand injury

Pumpkin carving is a cherished Halloween tradition that many families enjoy each year. However, pumpkin-related carving knife injuries can lead to nerve, tendon and artery injuries, — and they are preventable, notes Dr. Kang.

Understanding the risks and being careful can save you and your child a costly and traumatic visit to the emergency room. To avoid injuries, Dr. Kang encourages children to draw the pattern on the pumpkin, clean out the inside pulp and seeds with a spoon, but leave the knife work to mom and dad.

Fire hazards

What's Halloween without decorating your home with spooky decorations and, in many cases, lighted ornaments? However, Dr. Kang warns this can present some truly scary fire safety hazards. Lighting up your jack-o-lantern with glow sticks or electric candles is the safest option, she says.

Caution should always be exercised if using a real candle, however. Some decorations are also very flammable, Dr. Kang notes. These include cornstalks, dried flowers, crepe paper and plastic banners. The top 5 causes of most Halloween fires include careless actions and electrical malfunctions, according to fire data tracked by FEMA.

Costumes

It's important for parents to ensure that their child's mask has large enough eye holes for them to see clearly, Dr. Kang says. Children should wear bright and reflective costumes, and parents should beware of any small parts on costumes on which a child could choke. Also, check the length of costumes to make sure they don't cause your child to trip.

Face paint/Costume contact lenses

Before you apply makeup near your child's eyes, beware since it could contain harmful chemicals, according to the American Academy of Ophthalmology. If makeup is applied, it should be applied in small amounts to the arm of the person who will be wearing it.

The appearance of a rash, redness, swelling or other signs of irritation could indicate an allergic reaction. Additionally, the American Academy of Ophthalmology warns that though wearing costume contact lenses on Halloween can be a real scream, the scare from non-prescription contact lenses can be all too real when chemical exposure or potentially blinding infections take place. As such, they should be avoided.

Pedestrian safety

Since trick-or-treating can take place when it's dark, Dr. Kang encourages parents to provide children with flashlights or glowsticks for lighting and greater visibility, which can be incorporated into the costumes.

Another option is sticking reflective arm bands or reflective tape to bags or costumes to ensure your child can be seen. It's recommended that parents review street safety ahead of time with their children.

COVID-19 safety

Last but not least, although COVID-19 may not be as much on the minds of parents this Halloween, Dr. Kang encourages children to wear a mask as part of their costume, when possible, especially if trick-or-treating indoors, to maximize protection.

Also, children should always wash their hands with soap upon returning from trick-or-treating. It's also important to only eat factory-wrapped treats and candy, as that is a safer practice.

Hollywood actors want a deal

Studios are refusing to negotiate a new deal, putting people out of work.

By Mehdi Barakchian

Mehdi Barakchian is an actor, comedian and producer who has appeared in numerous screen productions.

Earlier this month, striking writers ratified a deal with major Hollywood studios that was greeted with excitement throughout the entertainment community. In a year of multiple strikes, it represented a major win for workers fighting growing income inequality.

Now, it's the actors' turn to reach a deal with studios — except that the studios have suspended talks with SAG-AFTRA, the union representing us.

The Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers (AMPTP) walked away from the bargaining table on October 11 and studio executives said they were suspending discussions because they were "no longer moving" forward "in a productive direction." In short, the actors and studios remain in a stalemate.

In case you haven't followed the actors' strike, the AMPTP and SAG-AFTRA are negotiating revenue sharing and policies around use of artificial intelligence (AI), among other items. Until we get a deal, actors like me remain on the picket lines. And as long as we're on the picket lines, a lot of great shows won't be filmed, and a lot of folks who rely on this industry will be out of work.

Maybe you're thinking "wait, I thought actors make tons of money?" Well, sure, it can be millions and millions of dollars — if you're an A-lister. Most of us don't come anywhere close.

In my case, you may not know my name, but you might recognize my kind-of-familiar face from one of the shows I've appeared in. Some have been pretty big hits over the last five years, including the supernatural drama series "Manifest," the psychological thriller series "You," and "Modern Love," an anthology series about human connection.

I'm fortunate to have enough success acting full time that I've been able to pay my bills and acquire health insurance. Back when my bookings were really booming, I proposed to my now wife and added a dog to our family — the typical sorts of things people do when they have financial stability.

But it's never been easy for the average actor to afford the conventional trappings of middle-class life — and it's getting harder all the time. One big problem for actors is that the business model for Hollywood film productions has completely changed, but the contracts have not. That's why actors went out on strike in July, a couple of months after the writers did.

Suffice to say, my not working for the past few months has been a financial hardship on my family. But the roughly 160,000 actors on strike are enduring what we hope to be a short-term pain for long term gains in pay, benefits and job protection. We miss the profession that we love, but we can't continue to work in conditions that compensate us less than our due and in an industry that fails to safeguard our careers as it embraces AI in a way that potentially could threaten our livelihoods.

A lot of Hollywood's biggest stars are on the picket lines too, lending us their moral support, for which I'm grateful. They are fighting with us for fair wages in an industry where the average salary in 2022 was a paltry $27.73 per hour for actors in California, according to the US Bureau of Labor Statistics. But most actors don't work a 40-hour work week, 12 months a year, so those stats may not fully capture just how precarious our livelihood

Acting is a notoriously tough profession to break into and maintain long-term security. Most of us who could were likely able to make a living did so because we were paid a fair wage based on viewership.

Prior to the advent of streaming, actors like me relied on residuals paid out based on how often we appeared in a show and how successful it was. That meant essentially, the more views, the more money we earned.

But the contracts we are operating under do not consider the dramatic increase in streaming numbers and the decline of network and cable viewership. In short, actors work much more to make ends meet and still sometimes find ourselves earning less.

When streaming first showed up, it had a lot of work to do to draw and maintain audiences. At the time, most of us were working in cable and network TV, which is where the audiences were. That large viewership, and the usage residuals this model provided, is why a lot of us were able to make a living. But the business has completely

Last year, streaming in the US surpassed cable and network TV in viewership. Many actors depend on residuals from previous programs but in the streaming era, that income has fallen precipitously.

This immense shift has changed the model, and the AMPTP, which represents movie and television producers, including Disney, Warner Brothers and Netflix (CNN's parent company is Warner Bros. Discovery, which produces movies and television shows.) And even as studios say that they're being squeezed financially, CEOs continue to earn tens of millions of dollars.

Meanwhile, SAG-AFTRA says 86% of its members don't qualify for health care coverage through the union, because they don't qualify under SAG-AFTRA's income threshold, which is about $26,500 a year.

What's more, many of us live in the most expensive cities in the country like Los Angeles and New York, because that's where the work and industry infrastructure negotiations. They've made overtures to try to end the exists. The average one-bedroom apartment in Los Angeles rents for about $3,000 per month, according to rent.com, which comes to $36,000 per year. So, if you're a Hollywood actor barely scraping by — well, you can do the

Another major sticking point is how the industry would like to use AI. The AI proposal from the AMPTP impacts the most marginalized and financially vulnerable performers in the entertainment industry — background

Obviously, the way in which actors' images will be used is a hugely important issue. SAG-AFTRA negotiators say the proposed contract would pay background actors for a day's work (they currently are paid at the rate of less than $200 per day), scan their body and use that image any way they want for the rest of the project. The union has also said that the studios want to own that scan to use for perpetuity, without the consent of the background actor and without providing further compensation. The AMPTP rejected this claim, and has said that they will require consent from the actor and the replica would only be used in the movie they signed up for.

But here's a sobering thought: AI technology is still incredibly young. We have no way of understanding or knowing what can be done with this information in 10, 20, or 30 years. The potential is limitless and protections for real people need to be put in place now.

You might be thinking, "With all your reservations about the way the business of Hollywood is run, why don't you just get a different job?" I'd turn the question around and ask you, "Wouldn't you fight for the job you love?"

Acting is my job. It's more than that – it's my passion. I've done thousands of auditions, performed thousands of hours on stage to hone my craft, finished hundreds of hours of really mediocre improv classes (and some good ones too) and made a cross-country move away from everyone and everything I know to pursue this career.

I think a lot of people were reminded of the value of on-screen entertainment in their lives during the Covid-19 pandemic. The stories we watched on big and small screens gave us something else to talk about — a way to escape the scary reality just outside our front door.

Several Hollywood A-listers, including Ben Affleck, Emma Stone and George Clooney, met with SAG-AFTRA leaders this week after the studios suspended strike, according to news reports; I'm hoping that all that star power helps get the talks back on track. The idea that underpaid union workers should "get a different job" while industry executives earn tens of millions of dollars feels like a post-apocalyptic show written by AI. But here we are — in real life.

Let's be clear: this fight is about the entire ecosystem that makes your favorite onscreen entertainment run. This includes actors like me, but also casting directors, costume departments, lighting crews, camera operators, producers, teamsters, make-up artists and so many more professionals with real lives, real families and real professional goals. None of us non-executives get rich working in this industry.

I couldn't be happier for my extended family in the Writers Guild of America whose sacrifice and determination allowed them to strike a deal with the studio execs that their leaders are happy with. Until the actors can say the same, you won't find my kind-offamiliar face on screen, but on the picket line.

Runaway debt is our biggest threat

We can't afford to keep giving away our money to foreign countries.

By Stephen Moore

Stephen Moore is a senior fellow at the Heritage Foundation and a co-founder of the Committee to Unleash Prosperity. His latest book is: "Govzilla: How the Relentless Growth of Government Imperils Our Economy."

After spending $6 trillion on social welfare and a Green New Deal spending spree and running our national debt up to $33 trillion, President Joe Biden is asking to whip out the federal credit card yet again for $100 billion more in military assistance for Ukraine and Israel and "humanitarian" aid.

Yes, it certainly is a dangerous world, and more so every day. But Biden has a lot of nerve proclaiming that he's 100% committed to the defense of Ukraine and Israel when his own policies have contributed directly to the hostilities.

The most impactful way to repel our enemies — China, Russia, Middle East terrorists — is to defund them by producing every ounce of oil, gas and coal here at home. Biden's war on American energy has cost the U.S. economy more than $200 billion in lost domestic energy output from the Trump pro-drilling trend. At least $40 billion of that has gone to the Iranians. You can buy a lot of rockets with that kind of money.

Meanwhile, the Russian war machine is almost entirely funded with petrodollars. They love that the heart of the Biden climate policy is to produce 3 million barrels a day less than we could and should be.

Biden misses a larger point about our national security. Right now, our debt is the nation's most urgent, clear and present danger — not just to our economic prosperity but to our national security. Presidents Ronald Reagan and Donald Trump believed rightly that when America is strong at home with an economy firing on all cylinders, we are strong, respected and feared abroad.

It's painful to say, but right now, America is far weaker militarily and economically than we were four years ago. The most important geopolitical power today is economic and technological superiority.

You don't achieve and retain that status by becoming the world's premier debtor nation.

Americans are starting to feel in the pocketbook the corrosive effect of a hemorrhaging $6 trillion budget. Everything we buy is 17% more expensive as the government effectively prints and borrows money to pay its bills. Mortgage rates are surging, with a 30-year mortgage interest rate at 8%, up from 3% when since Trump left office.

This means that on an average-priced house with a 30year mortgage, buyers will pay $1,500 a month more in payments. This will put homeownership out of reach for millions of Americans.

Then, there is the impact of skyrocketing federal interest payments on the debt. This year, for the first time, federal interest expenses exceed our entire national defense budget. With lower interest rate debt now turning over every day and having to be refinanced by issuing 5% and 6% Treasury bills, we're facing a death spiral of red Borrowing more money now would make all these problems much worse and make America less of a superpower going forward. Republicans should be insisting on three conditions for any more debt spending packages.

First, it has to be much smaller — cut at least by half – than $100 billion. This isn't Monopoly money we are talking about.

Second, any release of new funds must be accompanied by a pro-drilling strategy here at home to divert money away from our enemies.

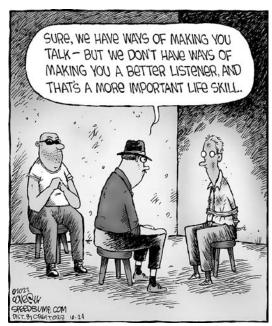

And third, every penny must be paid for dollar-fordollar with other spending cuts. This isn't a heavy lift. We simply slash the $380 billion green energy slush fund and other wasteful programs.

If Biden and Congress don't believe they can find and eliminate tens of billions of dollars of waste in the federal budget (about 1% of total spending), this is prima facie evidence that we need a new president and a new Congress.

Cal High students learn leadership skills at great heights

■ Students participated in a high-ropes challenge where they overcame their fears.

WHITTIER - California School's Academic Mentors embarked on a thrilling adventure at the Orange County Ropes Course, where they were pushed out of their comfort zones and taught valuable lessons in teamwork, courage and risk-taking.

The Orange County Ropes Course is an elaborate network of above-ground obstacles, climbing structures and a final zipline that are each designed to test a person's physical and mental abilities. The California High Academic Mentors faced the rope course on Oct. 5, building a strong mentality of overcoming obstacles that they will now bring to their mentoring sessions in the classroom.

"It was difficult to find the courage to go down the zipline at first, but the instructor helped me to relax and gave me the confidence to go for it," senior Academic Mentor up being fun, and I learned that to get started engaging as a role you shouldn't be afraid to take model," California High School some risks in life!"

As the Academic Mentors navigated the ropes course, they discovered the importance of effective communication and encouragement. Whether it was crossing a wobbly bridge or making the exhilarating descent down the zipline, they were uplift one another.

"Our Academic Mentors play an integral leadership role in the school," Principal Bill Schloss said. "They dedicate much of their time to helping all students achieve academic California High and personal success, as well as helping support them socially on the Orange County Ropes and emotionally."

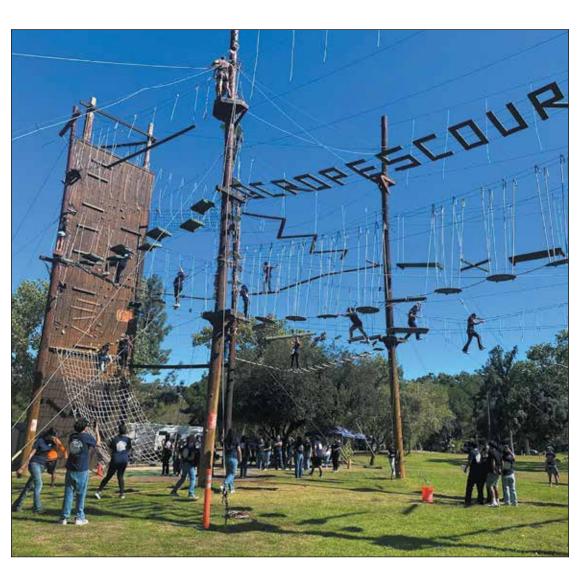

The Academic Mentors also gained a deeper understanding of the importance of patience and looking just one step ahead at a time, as well as the benefit of pushing past comfort zones and developing a growth mindset.

"In the classroom, our mentors are often tasked with approaching reluctant Justine Alvarez said. "It ended learners, and it can be difficult Intervention Specialist and math teacher Melissa Esquerra said. "Our goal in coordinating this field trip was to help our Academic Mentors gain more confidence and realize the potential of positive words in their work."

The California High School taught that success often relied Academic Mentors are a group on their ability to support and of juniors and seniors who help support teachers by working in small groups or one-on-one with mentees in classes that are designed to provide extra support to at-promise students.

> "Congratulations School's Academic Mentors for taking Course, exemplifying the values of teamwork, courage and pushing boundaries,' Board President Jaime López said. "Whittier Union is proud to provide many growth opportunities across the District that nurture our students as they continue 'To Achieve and Maintain Excellence."
