on new rail line name

DOWNEY – Los Angeles County Supervisor Janice Hahn is inviting the public's help to rename the "West Santa Ana Branch" rail line project.

The Metro light rail line will connect 10 cities in Southeast Los Angeles County and 1.4 million residents with accessible and reliable transit to downtown Los Angeles, but the name has long confused the public and has held back enthusiasm and support for the project.

Hahn has led an effort at Metro to rename the project and, starting Wednesday, the public will get to vote on the new name.

The planned rain line will run through Downey, Artesia, Cerritos, Paramount, Bellflower, South Gate, Cudahy, Bell, Huntington Park, Vernon to Union Station in downtown Los Angeles.

While the West Santa Ana Branch name carries historical significance, it has led to confusion because the line neither connects to the City of Santa Ana, nor is it west of most of Los Angeles County.

"This rail line is going to make a huge difference in the lives of residents from Artesia all the way to Huntington Park, but few people know about it because the name is so terrible," said Hahn. "So, we're picking a new name that people can get behind and connect with. Thank you to everyone who submitted one of the over 1,200 ideas we received. Now it's up to the public to vote for their favorites and help us 'Name That Train'."

"I'm excited to finally have a replacement name for the West Santa Ana Branch that properly represents and connects with the communities it will serve," said Whittier Mayor Pro Tem Fernando Dutra, who serves as 2nd Vice Chair on the Metro Board. "I appreciate the enthusiastic response from all the individuals that participated."

In the first part of the Name That Train contest, residents living up and down the line's route submitted over 1,200 possible names for consideration and a panel of judges selected 12 finalists:

Calafia: the mythical queen after which California-first thought to be the "Island of California"—is named.

Esperanza: "Hope" in Spanish. This project represents the aspirations of 1.4 million residents for improved mobility, better opportunities, and an enhanced quality of life.

Gateway Cities: This line will serve most of the Gateway Cities, making these communities more accessible to the rest of LA County and helping unify a regional identity.

Los Angeles Gateway: The Gateway Cities region will finally have a direct transit connection to the heart of Los Angeles.

Los Rios: This line will run along and cross our major rivers, including the San Gabriel River, the Los Angeles River and its Rio Hondo tributary.

Pioneer: Pioneer Blvd. runs through the heart of Artesia, the line's terminus. This project also represents a new frontier for the communities it will serve.

Pórtico: A portico is a door, a gateway to something new. This line will offer the Gateway Cities a portal to a brighter future.

Ruta Segura: "Safe Route" in Spanish. This project will give many new public transit users the confidence to travel on the Metro system.

Southeast: This line will serve not only Southeast Los Angeles but also most of Southeast Los Angeles County. Check the compass at Union Station; this line goes due Southeast.

Southeast Gateway: The communities of SELA and the Southeast LA County region—also known as the Gateway Cities will have a gateway to DTLA.

The Heartland Connection: This line will provide a like, 'Why did you follow me connection to the heart of the Metro system for the millions of residents of the Southeast Los Angeles County communities.

Tongva: The Tongva—whose name means "People of the Earth"—are the original inhabitants of the land that today is Southeast Los Angeles County.

The online public vote at RenameWSAB.com launches on November 15, 2023 and will close on December 17, 2023. Anyone can vote for their top three choices, ranked in order of preference. Votes are limited to one per person. The name with the most votes will be selected and announced in January 2024.

L.A. Metro plans to build a light rail line connecting Southeast L.A. County cities with Union Station. The rail line's name will be determined by a public vote.

Voting begins Parents say man continues to film children

■ Norwalk has installed cameras as Allen Perez continues to film children outside a school and park.

By Vincent Medina Contributor

NORWALK – The first time Cynthia Valdez, the mother of two daughters at New River Elementary School, called the public safety department to report Allen Perez for allegedly taking photos of her and her children at New River Park was on June 7.

Four months later, he continued to park his green Ford Explorer along the curb as the elementary school was let

"I would see him every day after school, but I thought he was a parent," Valdez said. "The Parks and Recreation staff told me they have been calling Public Safety on him since April, because they noticed him filming the kids."

Parents of students from New River Elementary School have come forward to explain the pattern of issues with Allen Perez, the man accused of taking photographs of children after school at New River Park.

While community members have called Public Safety and law enforcement to report the situation with Perez multiple unable to take any action against him.

As Public Safety officers explained to Valdez on June 7, under the first amendment Perez had the right to film while on public property in the park where privacy was not expected.

The following day Valdez called Public Safety again, after she said Perez followed her from her home to New River Park. Public Safety was still unable to act, she said.

As Valdez was putting her daughters in her car for a trip to McDonalds on Saturday, June 10, she looked up her driveway to find Perez sitting in his car outside her home. She brought her children back inside and called the Norwalk Sheriff's station.

"I stood there and I was home?" Valdez said. "The sheriff's came and they told me because he was on the curb, public property, they could not do anything.'

The officers told Valdez he would have to come to her home three times before she could file a stalking incident report and get a 90 day restraining order.

Valdez said her neighbors had also begun to notice Perez's suspicious behavior and confronted him on June 12. After that, Valdez filed a stalking incident report and was granted a temporary 90day restraining order pending further review.

When she filed the order, she learned Perez's name.

However, the restraining order detailed Perez was to stay 100 yards away from Valdez as he lives 300 yards away from her home.

Perez sought his own restraining order against Valdez alleging she was the one following him but was denied. Valdez's permanent restraining denied.

"They said because he never physically touched me, he restraining order was denied. He only followed me and never talked to me," Valdez said.

After the court proceedings and the restraining orders were denied on July 12, Valdez took her daughters to New River Park, and as she was with them, she saw Perez in his car parked on the curb.

"I didn't come back to the deal with him," Valdez said. "I posted on Facebook that he was filming the kids in the park."

During the summer, the community held a meeting with Public Safety officers in the park to discuss how to keep kids safe for the upcoming school year. Valdez reports the community members demanded increased patrols in the neighborhood as school ws let out.

However, Public Safety began increasing patrol by New River Elementary School in May, when they continued receiving numerous calls about and legal action as well. Perez in the park, according to the department.

of New River Elementary School, emailed parents to the public concerning the notify them of the ongoing situation on Oct. 17.

She reiterated that while times, the officers have been Parents have asked him to him. Also, the district is limited in their response because he is on a public street and not interfering with the school operations.

> "Recently flyers about this individual were posted in the Park claiming the individual is a sex offender, however database searches have come back with no record of any offense," Gardner's email read. "We will continue to monitor this situation with the assistance of [Norwalk Public Safety and the Norwalk Sheriff's] Departments."

> Mia Villasenor, a mother of two young children, recounted her first interaction with Perez on Oct. 19, when Perez allegedly attempted to follow her home. While her children are not of school age, she is a regular at the community park.

"I was starting to go home and he pulled over and tried to tell me something, but I kept driving. I turned into a residential street to hide from him and I saw him pass by," Villasenor said. "He made a U-turn to try to catch up to me, so I turned in another street and he blocked me.'

That week, the Norwalk City Council approved Public Safety to install security cameras in front of New River Park. However, Perez was not deterred and continued to park in front of the cameras.

Villasenor evaded Perez until the following day, when she returned to the park and waited for Valdez. Villasenor had parked in front of the cameras, but he got out of his car and began filming her car and her children.

She quickly locked herself in the car with her kids, their father and a family friend inside the vehicle until he left.

Villasenor filmed him as he

A protest erupted outside never went on my property, the Perez home on Nov. 2, after Fox11 News reported that a 13 year-old girl alleges to have seen Perez in his car "masturbating to kids." However, a police At the death of Mary I, report was never filed of the Elizabeth Tudor came to the incident.

> Perez's home was vandalized, as social justice groups spray painted and threw eggs at the house.

Councilmember Rick park because I don't want to Ramierez insists the groups that vandalized the house were not from Norwalk and encouraged the community to use the legal path if they make action against

> "We don't condone those actions, [parents in Norwalk] had no part in organizing any protests in front of anyone's home," Ramierez said. "We encourage rifle shooting on a are trying to do it the peaceful and the legal way, but parents are frustrated, they've tried everything legally.'

The city council released a statement encouraging peaceful

"The city strongly urges members 1973: move, law-enforcement has not of the public to avoid contact been able to take action against or confrontation with any individual who may pose a threat to their public safety or well being and also seeks the cooperation of everyone to not engage in an effort to take 1998: enforcement measures into their own hands.

The Norwalk Sheriff's released Department statement explaining that during the July community meeting, the activities of Perez did not rise to the level of criminal activity. The statement read that patrols were increased in the vicinity, aimed to ensure everyone's safety.

"We understand that this is very concerning for parents and the community, and we will ensure that any official complaint will be thoroughly investigated," the sheriff department statement reads. "There are some allegations of potential lewd acts by the adult male in some media reports however the department has not received an official report through the Norwalk Sheriff's Station or the Norwalk Public Safety Department."

They urge anyone who has information regarding the incident to contact the Norwalk Sheriff's Station and file an official report so an investigation can begin.

Norwalk La Mirada Unified School District Board Education released a similar statement to Gardner, explaining that they are limited in their response as the "individual" has not broken any laws regarding occupying Hubei Province, China public spaces. The statement read the board is working with the Public Safety and Sheriff's Departments and will continue to monitor this situation.

Perez did not respond to calls for comments.

Downey art gallery threatens closure without city funding

■ Stay Gallery could close in January without a funding commitment from the city of Downey.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY – With their agreement with the city of Downey expired and minimal funds coming in, Stay Arts fears that its namesake gallery may

After previously having their lease paid for by the city, Stay Arts – who operates Stay Gallery - say that conversations about the space's future funding have grown cold.

Instead, Stay says that it was told to apply for the city's new Community Based Organization Funding Program, which will see a $100,000 grant divvied up between nonprofits for use on programs, events, and projects.

"What's happening is our operating agreement with the city of Downey lapsed in May; it's been an agreement that has been renewed since our start in 2012," said Gabriel of Stay Arts. "That agreement maintain their building. is a contractual agreement where Stay provides services to the community in the form of programs and maintaining and operating [the gallery], and we are compensated through the Art in Public Places Fund in the form of lease payments for the building."

agreement has been renewed every three years, with the final added that Stay had tried to renew the agreement in various ways, submitting proposals since around 2021 "to envision what going forward would look

"Essentially, our proposal, our requests have not been prioritized," said Enamorado.

Stay did apply for the CBO grant, but Enamorado says that even if they are selected, "it's two different expenses."

"The thing is, that grant soon be forced to shut its doors. is specifically for programs and services and events. Our funding from the AIPP is specifically for our building, and when you look at the Art in Public Places ordinance, it specifically states that money is for public art installations and art venues in the downtown."

> Stay applied for three months of affordable workshops and classes in Spring 2024, but according to Programs Director Juliana Canty, the gallery would 'still be at risk of closing."

"That's the thing that's so hard to communicate and have people understand, is this is a service; we're just providing a service the way parks and rec offers a service, the way other community departments offer services," said Enamorado. "It's not cash-driven, it's not profitdriven. It's purely to provide a

"Even if we were to receive organization; we're providing service and we see what we do that grant, it's still not a viable a service and filling a need, not as a reciprocal exchange with solution for the lease of the this market that we're tapping the city; we're provided funding to just keep this thing going."

> Stay might be able to hang onto the gallery until January before starting to pack up shop. Should the gallery close, he guaranteed that Stay Arts would still have a presence within the community.

frustratingly, Enamorado says he's never been given a reason why support for the gallery seems to have vanished. Canty offered that there was a narrative that "Stay Gallery needs to be fully self-sufficient," which argues is a "moot point."

"We're a service-based organization. The city is not our she only source of income, we're not relying fully on the city," said Canty. "We're working hard every single day to apply for grants, to fundraise, to collect donations, to find other sources of income. We diversify our streams of income, and being a non-profit, a large aspect of being a nonprofit is partnering with local government, other organizations, foundations; it's a massive part of why a nonprofit exists, is to fill a void that is not being met in a certain

"The argument that we need to be fully self-sufficient off of the services that we're providing, it doesn't make sense because the services that were providing are a benefit to the community; they're not profit driven."

Enamorado says that if they "have to lose the building, we will," however Canty added that "the community doesn't want to lose the space."

"This is literally the only visual arts space and gallery in the city of Downey," said Canty. "If you lose that, you're cutting off so much access to not only Downey residents, but people in neighboring communities who have no access at all in their cities for arts programming."

Hoping to garner support, the organization has kicked off a "Save Stay" campaign, including an online petition which has already gathered over 1,000 signatures. The gallery also mustered a strong show of support at Tuesday's council meeting, drawing around 30 speakers on its behalf.

The council agreed to discuss Stay's funding request at a future meeting.

The California High-Speed Rail Authority (Authority) continues to advance work to deliver the nation's first high-speed rail system.

The Los Angeles to Anaheim (LA-A) Project Section is approaching a new milestone, moving closer to connecting Los Angeles and Anaheim to the Central Valley and San Francisco with a one-seat

The approximately 33-mile corridor connects Los Angeles Union Station (LAUS) to the Anaheim Regional Transportation Intermodal Center (ARTIC) using the existing passenger and freight rail corridor,

The Authority recently released a Supplemental Alternatives Analysis (SAA) identifying a new build alternative, the Shared Passenger Track Alternative, to be studied within the environmental document. This alternative is similar to the 2018 High-Speed Rail (HSR) Project Alternative but includes some changes, such as reducing proposed train operating frequency, proposing to retain some at-grade crossings in Anaheim, proposes potential sites for a light maintenance facility, and eliminating the need for a new BNSF Intermodal Facility in San Bernardino County. The Authority is studying possible staging tracks sites in the high-desert area as mitigation for impacts to freight rail during construction and operation of statewide HSR program.

The statewide HSR program and its LA-A Project Section contribute to economic development, a cleaner environment, and job creation; all while investing in regional and local rail lines to meet the State's 21st century transportation needs.

Tip prompts are out of control

Tipping before service is rendered defeats its original purpose.

By Tracy Moore

Tracy Moore is a writer in Los Angeles.

I was just leaving a new grab-and-go market in my neighborhood last weekend when the checkout screen suggested I add a tip. With an employee hovering about, I selected 10 percent. In my routine tipping fog, it took a few seconds before I realized that I had handed over an extra $1.70 on a bag of already marked-up coffee beans.

The moment is a reminder that tipping is now out of control. Gratuity prompts have become so widespread and indiscriminate that a new study from the Pew Research Center shows it is causing mass confusion and frustration. We've been prompted to tip for any counter service for some time now, but nudges are now popping up at self-service kiosks at stadiums, airports and cafes. More is coming: Having new windows installed in your home? Tip it up, America.

Before you call me a cheapskate, I'm not here to criticize or diminish the hard-working folks behind the counter — or the internet's virtual service walls — or anywhere else. I blame the stingy employers that profit by making customers responsible for their refusal to pay a decent wage.

Tipping has always been debated, but we broadly agreed on its purpose: A gratuity one gives after a service is rendered to reward the human effort and care demonstrably provided, in what is sometimes thought of as low-wage or underpaid work. We tip after the sit-down meal, after admiring our new haircut, after the bartender whips up a drink. We might tip a valet up front to take care of our car, but it is not necessary to do so to receive the service in the first place.

Or at least, it wasn't. It now seems that I can't buy anything without being prompted to tip before service is rendered, upending the traditional why of tipping. Case in point: food delivery apps, where front-loading a tip is not only customary but necessary for the order to even be picked up. It's a practice now referred to as no tip, no trip. To be clear, you might still receive the food late, cold, wrong, or not at all. But, by then, the tip is out of your hands and in someone else's pocket.

Some ride-hailing apps routinely ask for a tip soon after the trip begins. And some online purchases are turning our virtual carts into tip jars, too. Last week, a friend in Pittsburgh sent me a screenshot of a tip prompt from an Instagram shop after purchasing a cushion for an office chair. The prompt had invited him to "show some support for the team."

I am a lifelong tipper, regardless of the quality of service. I waited tables at Holiday Inn as a teenager and then at various joints in Tennessee to put myself through college. I consider bad tipping a good indicator of sociopathy. Servers are unfairly punished for mishaps far beyond their control, usually the result of a poorly run kitchen.

The easy-to-tap buttons for 10, 15, 20 percent — in Los Angeles, often 30 percent! — have put tipping on autopilot. It may spare us the awkward math, but it also erases the pause for appreciation. The presence of a watchful employee has turned the act of tipping, even for subpar or no service, into a reflex rather than a reflection. We often tip simply to end the transaction, and businesses bank on that.

Tipping has never been the right solution to unfair compensation. It has a racist and sexist past in which women and marginalized people were long made to bear the brunt of egregiously cheap employers. Studies show it offers little incentive to provide better service, and its continued practice does nothing to encourage employers to pony up and pay a decent wage.

But let there be no confusion about who is at fault here. It is the companies who are betting that hurried consumers will subsidize what employers won't pay themselves. It was the boss who paid me $2.13 an hour back in the day, with no benefits, and who demanded I share my tips with others so he could avoid paying my coworkers their fair wages, too.

We can thank the pandemic for compelling society to better value the worker, but we will have gone backward if we've moved from tips for service to tips for transactions. (Who gets my 10 percent self-checkout tip, anyway, and for what?) One only need review what some companies say when asked to explain themselves: They point out that the tip prompt is optional.

Well, here's a better option. Employers: Pay your workers a living wage, so that tips become what they should be, an extra thank you for a service provided, not a stand-in for the lack of a fair paycheck itself.

The 6% real estate commission is doomed

A recent court ruling could drastically change how real estate brokers set their fees.

By Stephen Brobeck

Stephen Brobeck is a senior fellow at the Consumer Federation of America.

On Oct. 31, a Kansas City, Missouri, jury ruled that the National Association of Realtors, or NAR, and several residential brokerages engaged in illegal price-fixing and awarded damages to Missouri home sellers that could total more than $5 billion. This decision has made it highly likely that in the future, the industry will no longer be able to charge 5% to 6% commission rates across the board.

What plaintiffs successfully challenged was the industry requirement that for a home to be listed on a local multiple listing service, sellers must offer compensation to buyer agents. That mandatory offer has allowed industry agents and brokers to collude by setting rates.

Homes listed below the going rate of 2.5% to 3% may not be shown by buyer agents. And buyers do not believe or see a reason that they can negotiate the rate down because they are told by their agents that sellers typically pay this expense. NAR has said it will appeal the verdict.

During the 1940s, this price-setting was explicit — the industry employed price schedules — but after successful challenges from the Justice Department, the near-uniform commissions were maintained through collusion.

Industry members agreed among themselves to maintain commission levels that are far higher than in most other countries — according to the lawsuit, rates in some other large nations range from 1% to 3%. More significantly, consumers began asking: How can agents justify charging $25,000 to $30,000 in commissions on the sale of a $500,000 home? And why do agents, regardless of their experience, competence or effort on an individual sale, charge the same commission rates?

Litigators and the Justice Department are determined to end this requirement, allowing homebuyers to search for and negotiate lower commission rates. The judge in the Kansas City case is likely to require separation of buyer and listing agent commissions. So is the judge in a similar but much larger Chicago case that goes to trial early next year.

Copycat lawsuits have already been filed, and it is likely that their number will increase. The Justice Department, which is already in litigation with NAR over DOJ access to industry data, recently joined the discussion of a final settlement in the Kansas City case.

It is highly likely that these efforts will increasingly allow both buyers (and encourage sellers) to comparison shop for and negotiate commission rates. The Consumer Federation of America predicts that this competition would lower rates from 5% to 6% to an average of 3% to 4%, with much greater variation from agent to agent depending on agent competence and experience. This reduction would reduce commissions paid by an estimated $20 billion to $30 billion annually.

The industry argues that requiring homebuyers to pay commissions would make it difficult for some to afford homeownership. In reality, effective rate competition would lower — not raise — the cost of buying a home. Today, buyer agent commissions are baked into the sale price of homes, but buyers are unable to comparison shop for and negotiate them. If buyers knew they were paying these commissions, many would look for lower rates, have serious conversations with their agents about compensation and try to negotiate lower commissions.

What remains to be determined is exactly how the transition from price-setting to price competition will take place. Ultimately, the Consumer Federation of America believes, it will end up with buyers being able to finance buyer agent commissions as part of their mortgage. But the resounding jury decision, future class action lawsuits and determined federal regulators virtually ensure that this transition will occur. Increasingly, the residential real estate brokerage marketplace will look like competitive markets for other goods and services, to the great benefit of consumers.

What we can learn from Barbra

Barbra Streisand's memoir reminds us to seek out life's pleasures.

By Holly Thomas

Holly Thomas is a writer and editor based in London. She is morning editor at Katie Couric Media.

Barbra Streisand is that rare breed of megastar who transcends time and fashion. She's sold over 150 million records and won eight Grammys, two Oscars, four Emmys and a Tony. Her new memoir, "My Name Is Barbra," is a nearly 1,000-page epic charting her rise from a Brooklyn housing project to a position in 20th-century entertainment rivaled only by Frank Sinatra. Yet in a life defined by overachievement, there's one area in which the 81-year-old feels she's conspicuously failed.

"I haven't had much fun in my life, to tell you the truth," she told the BBC this week. "And I want to have more fun."

This is the legend who kicked off her singing career by winning a talent contest at a gay bar in Greenwich Village. She enjoys pancakes in bed with her husband James Brolin, and her basement contains an entire street of antique "shops" (minus cash registers) to house her treasures. If Barbra's not having fun, who on earth is?

For my money, not nearly enough of us. Remember when the Covid-19 lockdowns hit in 2020, and an exuberant swathe of articles predicted that once the dust had settled, we'd welcome in the Roaring 20s 2.0? That December, Yale professor and social epidemiologist Dr. Nicholas Christakis laid out a post-pandemic vision that could see us "relentlessly seek out social interactions," including "sexual licentiousness," liberal spending and a "reverse of religiosity."

I don't know about you, but on the rare occasions it stops raining long enough to venture outside and take the temperature of the populace, I'm not met with hordes of youths channeling their disillusionment with some 21st-century equivalent of the Charleston.

I see streets lined with posters protesting a laundry list of appalling global conflicts, trains and buses rammed with passengers frenetically scanning their phones and bars crammed with over-30s because no one younger can afford a drink. Depression rates are soaring, sexual activity is on the decline and stressed, unhappy workers are mentally checking out. The mood is dark, and the overwhelming majority, who aren't multimillionaire octogenarians, face it with a distinct financial handicap.

Where are we going wrong? The ambient gaiety a century ago was sufficient to label an entire decade after it, despite all manner of horrors. The year 1920 dawned amid a major recession. World War I — not to mention the Spanish flu pandemic — had left deep physical and psychological scars, and racism had such a grip on major parts of the United States that hooded Klansmen marched through Washington in 1925.

But, for some people at least, it seems the weight of tragedy only reinforced the feeling that life and its fleeting pleasures ought to be seized with greater urgency. America's youth kicked up its heels, embraced the intoxicating rhythms of the Jazz Age and swigged bootlegged gin. The dance craze that swept Britain was so intense that it prompted London's Piccadilly Hotel to ban the Charleston out of moral panic. Now though, faced with comparably daunting socioeconomic and political convulsions, we appear to be buckling. Why?

There's one obvious difference. In 1920, the median age of an American was 25.3. In 2020, it was 38.8 and in 2022, it was 38.9. The demographic of US adults aged 65 and older grew nearly five times faster than the population as a whole between 1920 and 2020. Fun doesn't (and shouldn't) belong only to the young. But older populations tend to come with hefty financial and social pressures.

They demand more of health care systems, and of younger family members who must step up when those fall short. Older people tend to live in homes that are bigger than they need squeezing out younger families, and raise the cost of housing overall. This is undoubtedly challenging. I don't think it wholly accounts for our fun drought, though.

While money and space can certainly be conducive to amusement, as Streisand demonstrates, they're not the magic sauce. I think the difference is that we, and the world, feel more fragile than we ever have before. After World War I, there was a widespread belief that such a bloody conflict could never be sanctioned again. That faith has long since been lost.

As if that isn't downer enough, arguably the greatest challenge facing us is the climate crisis, which, by its very nature, quashes any potential buoyancy. It's a forever problem, one we know we'll be dealing with for the rest of our lives. Managing it necessitates constant incremental efforts (minimizing waste, cutting down travel), rather than intense but transient demonstrations of courage or discipline

This, plus the more individualized stressors of work, mental illness and the rest, requires stamina to cope. Blowing off steam 1920s-style feels harder to legitimize when we're all acutely aware of the adverse effects of booze, cigarettes and under-sleeping. Instead, the 21st-century obsession is self-care. And while no one's arguing the benefits of hydration and a solid eight hours, neither offers the high of a night spent dancing with abandon.

So, is all hope lost? Should we resign ourselves to lives bereft of carefree joy? I think not. I say we take a leaf out of Streisand's gigantic book and make a conscious effort to inject some old-fashioned fun into our lives. This needn't translate to being soused 24/7, but there's no harm in anyone of any age upending their carefully polished routine once in a while if a tantalizing opportunity arises. And according to Christakis' prediction, the Roaring 2020s aren't expected to kick off properly until 2024. Here's looking at you, January.
