Hahn helps kick off CARE Court in Norwalk

■ High schoolers shared the benefits of Cal High's Academic Commitment to Excellence program.

NORWALK – Los Angeles County Supervisor Janice Hahn, in collaboration with the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Los Angeles County Department of Mental Health (LACDMH), and Los Angeles County Public Defense Counsel Office (IDCO) announced the launch of the Community state-funded Assistance, known as CARE Court.

Qualified individuals such as a family member, spouse, roommate, emergency responder, or licensed medical or mental health professional - will be able to petition the Court for an eligible individual with untreated schizophrenia or other associated psychotic disorders to receive treatment and services to stabilize their symptoms and continue on a a family member, clinician path of recovery and well-being.

"I talk to too many families who have struggled to get help for their loved ones with severe mental illness and we see too many people with schizophrenia on the streets. CARE Court is a tool we have been missing in LA County," said Supervisor Janice Hahn. She continued, "Through CARE Court, we will nowhere else to go."

LA County CARE Court was initially set to launch in December 2024, but the Court and the County agreed to move the start date up one year to provide early access to this new valuable tool to County residents.

CARE "Implementing Court in Los Angeles will help create change systemically in the lives of individuals who are struggling with mental illness," said Supervisor Kathryn Barger, Fifth District.

"Our courts are an important asset and can be a change agent in the lives of many. By creating this special partnership between the courts and our mental health systems, we are creating a pathway towards healing and rehabilitation."

The intent of the CARE program is to provide an additional tool to help families and individuals find support for  $their\ loved\ ones.\ For\ individuals$ who qualify and agree to participate in CARE Court, housing options, along with connections to social services, are provided via a CARE Plan.

"CARE Court will help us Defender's Office/Independent connect individuals with the highest needs to the care they require. As we continue to grapple with a mental health Recovery and crisis on our streets, especially Empowerment program, better on Skid Row and MacArthur Park in my district, CARE Court will be an important tool to address an individual's need with dignity and respect. I look forward to working with the Department of Mental Health, the Courts, and the Public Defender's Office on implementing this important initiative," said Supervisor Solis, First District.

> To seek these services, or other person files what is known as a CARE Act petition for someone who is in need of help. Filing a petition is free. A judge reviews the petition and determines if the person is eligible for the CARE program. Specific eligibility requirements can be found at www.lacourt.

"CARE Court provides the now be better able to support largest trial court in the nation people suffering from untreated with an opportunity to maximize schizophrenia and their families the expertise of judicial officers who have historically had who are dedicated to providing support to individuals suffering from mental health disorders with a forum in which they will feel empowered to succeed and pave the way to leading healthy and stable lives," Presiding Judge Samantha P. Jessner

> "I would like to thank our partners at the Los Angeles County Department of Mental Health, the Los Angeles County Chief Executive's Office, the Los Angeles County Public Defender, the Independent Defense Counsel's Office, and the Board of Supervisors, particularly Supervisor Hahn, for engaging so deeply and collaboratively, enabling the County and the Court to launch CARE Court one year earlier than required so that qualifying individuals can begin receiving the care they need and deserve to stabilize and succeed."

Rather than cycling through jails and emergency rooms, CARE Court gives vulnerable individuals (and those who care for them) another path to access key services. Participants can receive many kinds of support to promote recovery and wellbeing, including counseling, medication, and social services. If an individual is accepted into the program, their CARE team of clinicians, case managers and others work with them to develop a plan that will provide services tailored to their needs.

"CARE Court offers people with schizophrenia and other related serious untreated mental health disorders the Director Dr. Lisa H. Wong.

"It is the latest resource we are offering to put at-risk community members on the path to recovery. Ultimately, our priority is to enable people to heal, live safely in community, and thrive; and our goal is to ensure that there is no wrong door when someone reaches out

The CARE program is strictly voluntary. Participants cannot be forced to participate in services — including taking medication — against their will and can leave the program at any time.

Cal High students share academic success stories with eighth graders

■ High schoolers shared the benefits of Cal High's Academic Commitment to Excellence program.

WHITTIER - California School's Academic Commitment to Excellence (ACE) students took a journey through their unique high school experiences and stories while connecting with Hillview Middle School eighth-graders during an event that aimed to encourage students to apply for ACE, a program that provides encouragement support, and resources to at-promise

The ACE program provides students with additional help in making the transition from middle to high school, particularly in the subjects of math and English. In addition to the extra support students receive in these areas, the enrichment activities complement the curricula.

"We continue tracking the progress of our ACE students all the way through senior year and make sure they know we're still here to support them on their path to success," ACE Program teacher Ann Gonzalez said. "All of our ACE students get to sit together at graduation and wear a special stole in recognition of services, homeless services, their achievement - it's really a behavioral health services and great moment!"

California High ACE juniors Elyssa Velazquez, Quentin Laporte and Savannah Apodaca accompanied Gonzalez to Hillview on Nov. 7, where they spoke with middle school students about the benefits of being part of ACE and answered questions about the program.

"I loved being able to talk to completed the courses. program coordinates guest the middle schoolers about the speakers, college visits and ACE program and share how beneficial it was for me going into high school," Velazquez said. "The ACE program is so special to me - it made me realize that there is always someone there if I need help in school or in life."

> The ACE program is partnered with local nonprofit Helpline Youth Counseling (HYC), which offers family more to the community. HYC representatives speak with ACE students once a week, covering life skill topics in stress management, family communication, substance abuse, how media affects mental health and more. At the end of HYC's speaking series, ACE students receive a special certificate showing they

"My biggest takeaway from our time with HYC is the concept of self-love and how important it is to communicate with others to solve problems," freshman Abbie Sykes said. "The ACE program is so great because I get extra support to help me succeed and the teachers are amazing!'

Several middle school students applied to be part of the ACE program after hearing about all the benefits and life skills the program offers.

"Our ACE program's visit to Hillview gave middle schoolers an early glimpse into the support and caring culture that is waiting for them in high school," California High School principal Bill Schloss said. "ACE helps students get on the right track and ensures all students are equipped with the resources and tools they need to succeed."

Sports Illustrated used AI writers and people didn't notice

What does it say about journalism when readers can't distinguish between authentic reporting and AI-generated content?

By Will Leitch

Will Leitch is a contributing editor at New York Magazine, the founder of the late sports website Deadspin and the author of six books, including the novels "How Lucky" and "The Time Has Come"

During my downtime, I like to take a break and play a baseball simulation game called Out of the Park Baseball, or OOTP. I would happily bore you for hours explaining this game, but in lieu of that, I will simply say that you construct a roster of MLB players and then play it against other teams in simulations. At the end of each game, OOTP produces a box score and statistics, but it also adds a feature that always tickles me: It writes up a game story.

Technically, the details of that writeup are true. But of course none of it actually happened, no actual baseball was played and no human was hired to write a story about it. The "game story" is entirely AI-generated. And you know what? It's fine. If you asked me, a professional sports writer for nearly two decades, to write a three-paragraph story on these simulated games, it might look similar. Though I'd like to think I'd get better quotes.

The point is: The conventions of sports writing—the who, what, when, where and how—are so established at this point that they are unusually easy to emulate by a robot, to the point that a silly baseball simulation game can, in certain contexts, do it as well as I can. Which is why it wasn't particularly surprising to learn this week, in a fantastic scoop from Futurism, that Sports Illustrated has been running fake, AI-generated articles—"written" by non-existent humans with AI-generated images and bios—for months now.

The magazine—it's probably not accurate to call Sports Illustrated a "magazine" at this point after the draconian cuts that have been made to its staff, but I'm honestly not sure what else to call it—immediately deleted the articles when Futurism called attention to them, which, as a human writer, I can confirm upsets the author a lot less when the author is a robot. The blowback has been overwhelming, from a full—on (human) staff revolt to an industry—wide lament of just what the once—revered institution, one that once published William Faulkner, Robert Frost and John Steinbeck, had become. How could Sports Illustrated have come to this?

After Futurism published its report, a spokesperson for The Arena Group, which has owned and operated Sports Illustrated since 2019, told CNN that the now-deleted articles were created by a third-party company. "We have learned that AdVon had writers use a pen or pseudo name in certain articles to protect author privacy — actions we don't condone — and we are removing the content while our internal investigation continues and have since ended the partnership," the spokesperson said.

It shouldn't be that surprising that Sports Illustrated has found itself under fire; the publication's struggles under owner The Arena Group (formerly Maven) have been welldocumented. There are still many terrific journalists there, from young stars like Richard Johnson to Emma Baccellieri to established vets like Pat Forde and Tom Verducci, but all you've had to do is visit SI.com at any time in the last three years to see how much the journalistic experience has degraded, taken over by fansites, branding exercises (Sports Illustrated the resort!) and the regular detritus you expect to find on almost any corporate website these days. If you are just now gnashing your teeth about what has happened to Sports Illustrated since you read the magazine as a kid, you are getting on this bus very, very late. (Full disclosure: I briefly hosted a television show for Sports Illustrated a few years back that no one watched).

It's hardly the first once-respected sports website to fall prey to the desperation of AI-generated content: The site I founded, Deadspin, has restarted its AI program, and while it's thoroughly depressing to see my pride and joy turned into a robot content farm, I have to confess I'm not sure the human writers over there are faring much better. But the only difference between those sports sites using AI writers and other sports sites using AI writers is that people actually used to enjoy Sports Illustrated and Deadspin; Yahoo, for example, has been contracted with a company called "Automated Insights" to write AI sport stories for years. It doesn't seem like that many people have noticed, or really cared if they did.

And I think there's even something existential about the profession here. The other big sports media controversy of recent weeks involved Fox and Amazon sideline reporter Charissa Thompson (whom I've also worked with, it's a small industry, people) confessing on a podcast that she, when she couldn't track down a coach at halftime for an ingame quote, would "make up the report sometimes."

Many smart sideline reporters, including Hall of Famer Andrea Kremer, blasted Thompson for the obviously unethical behavior (for which she apologized, saying she "chose the wrong words to describe the situation"). But it is worth noting that despite Thompson working as a sideline reporter for eight years, not once did anyone notice that she might have been making up stories even though she had one of the most high-profile jobs in the profession.

Thompson herself said she could get away with it because, as The New York Times put it, "no coach would object to her citing boilerplate comments about the team's performance." That's pretty damning right there, isn't it? Making up reporting is bad, obviously. But what does it say about the reporting in the first place that Thompson's (self-alleged) made-up stories were indistinguishable from the empty prattle she usually got out of coaches?

Usually when journalists make up stories, they do so to make them more interesting (and of course, the vast majority of journalists do nothing of the sort). But Thompson knew not to do that, because if she would have made them interesting, they would have sounded fake. Because she—and so many other sideline reporters—so rarely gave us anything worthwhile. Her deception was a sad, empty cracked-mirror image of what she was giving us anyway. If sports journalists can't give us anything that isn't obviously different than something made up specifically to be boring and anodyne, well, how much better are we than the robots anyway?

Another game I like to play in my downtime is NBA2K, the wildly popular NBA video game. At halftime of every game I play, the (virtual) announcer throws it down courtside to an XBOX avatar of Curt Gowdy Award-winning reporter David Aldridge, who, in real life, is a fantastic journalist whom NBA fans have known and respected for years. But in the game, Aldridge is not real; he's just some pixels synced to audio the real Aldridge recorded years ago.

The last time I played, Video Aldridge asked Video Julius Randle, who had 16 first-half points for my Video Knicks, what the key to his performance in the first half was. Video Julius Randle (also synced to audio the real Randle recorded years ago) answered in empty platitudes, because how could he not? He's not real. He's describing a game that didn't happen. The whole interview is made-up, because the game is made-up.

And you know what? I get just as much insight from a NBA2K courtside interview as I do from a real one. They sound exactly the same. Is it any wonder Thompson wouldn't bother with an actual interview? A robot literally does it just as well.

So as much as I was saddened by Sports Illustrated's AI debacle, not to mention what's happening at my old site, I still find myself less offended by the robots than I am despairing at the quality of the work they're ostensibly replacing. Sports writers insist, as we fight back against a creeping AI world, that we can always do our jobs better than a robot can. If we'd like to continue working in this industry and having the trust and eyeballs of our readers and viewers ... I'd humbly suggest we work a little harder to make sure we can prove it.

I got Covid this Thanksgiving, and I'm grateful

Those who catch COVID-19 now are better off than those during the onset of the pandemic, thanks to vaccines.

By Keith Raffel

Keith Raffel's has served as the senior counsel to the Senate Intelligence Committee, started an award-winning internet software company and written five novels, which you can check out at keithraffel.com. He currently spends the academic year as a resident scholar at Harvard.

For almost four years, I eluded the COVID-19 virus that was stalking me, family and friends, fellow Americans and all humankind. I figured I was safe when I sat down for a family Thanksgiving dinner, but it turned out I was a sitting duck (turkey?) for my pathological pursuer. And how do I feel about all this? Thankful.

By avoiding the virus for so long, I missed the most dangerous variants and could get the latest version of the vaccination. So, I ended up not with a life-threatening disease, but what feels like a mild cold. I'm going to miss a holiday party I sorely wanted to attend. As my mom used to say to my toddler self after I scraped a knee, "You'll live."

And I will indeed live on, grateful to Nobel Prize winners Katalin Kariko and Drew Weissman for their discoveries that enabled speedy development of COVID-19 vaccines. It hurts me to say it, but I am even thankful to former President Donald Trump for backing Operation Warp Speed, which used the discoveries of the Nobel laureates to develop an effective COVID-19 vaccine in less than a year.

I'm used to resenting Big Pharma, but not this time. I am grateful for the role Moderna and Pfizer played in getting that vaccine out. Millions more would have died around the world if the COVID-19 vaccine had taken as long from discovery to deployment as the previous recordholder, the mumps vaccine, which took four years.

So, it's all worked out pretty well for me. But despite the miraculously speedy development of vaccines, it could've worked out better for others over the past four years. And it could work out better for others going forward.

Around 1.2 million Americans have died of COVID-19 since the pandemic began. The mortality rate for those who were unvaccinated was 250% higher than those who were. That means hundreds of thousands of Americans died unnecessarily.

And even with this lesson in front of them, over 80% of U.S. adults have failed to get the updated COVID-19 vaccine since it became available in late September. The life expectancy of Americans has doubled since 1900, and vaccinations are a major reason. Do tens of millions of Americans want to go back to the days of smallpox and polio epidemics?

Among a certain part of the population, the answer at least appears to be yes. The death rate from COVID-19 has been greater in Republican-leaning counties. Florida's Republican Gov. Ron DeSantis has accused the federal government of mishandling vaccine rollout even while it appears his administration is doing the mishandling. A New York Times analysis found that "unlike the nation as a whole, Florida lost more lives to Covid after vaccines became available to all adults, not before."

Despite a lack of any evidence whatsoever, presidential candidates DeSantis and Nikki Haley have implied getting vaccinated can interfere with a woman's fertility.

Robert Kennedy Jr. became prominent on the national scene as an anti-vaxxer. He hasn't noticeably changed his views as he runs for the presidency as an independent. He said in a July interview, "There's no vaccine that is safe and effective."

That's just not true. Do not listen to what DeSantis, Haley or Kennedy Jr. are saying about COVID-19 vaccinations.

According to the Department of Health for the state of Washington, "From Oct. 6 to Nov. 2, 2023, unvaccinated individuals were between two and 4.5 times more likely to be hospitalized with COVID-19 compared to those who received at least one booster dose."

Most of the deaths from COVID-19 befall those Americans over age 65. That cohort constitutes 16% of the U.S. population but has accounted for an estimated 75% of the COVID-19 deaths. But only a third of those senior citizens have received the latest COVID-19 vaccine. Over half of Americans have no intention of getting it.

For Americans over 65, just go get the latest shot. It's protection against hospitalization and death. For those under 65, even if your chances of hospitalization and death are low, you probably will, like me, get a milder case should you catch it and at the same time decrease the chances of infecting someone over 65.

I live on a college campus amid hundreds of students. They should be getting vaccines before they go home — if not for themselves, then for the older generation. No one wants to give a COVID-19 infection to a grandparent as a holiday gift.

President Joe Biden has declared the COVID-19 pandemic to be over. Maybe so, but as a friend wrote to me upon hearing I was infected, "We might be done with Covid, but Covid is not done with us."

The newest variant appears more contagious than previous ones. COVID-19 rates are rising. Hospitalizations due to COVID-19 were up 10% Thanksgiving week (when I was infected!), the most recent week where data are available.

Come on, fellow Americans. Get vaccinated. It's easy and safe. You don't want to die. I believe in your good hearts. You don't want a loved one to die whether infected by you or a stranger. Neither does anyone else.

As Stay Gallery seeks funding, Downey finds itself at a crossroads with cultural arts

■ Downey has a long, rich history of supporting cultural arts, but what does the future hold?

By Carol Kearns Contributor

DOWNEY – Within the past month scores of people have written letters and spoken publicly to the Downey City Council, urging city leaders to continue a service contract that would allow Stay Gallery to remain open.

The small arts venue on Downey Avenue, just a half block from Porto's, was opened eleven years ago as an artistic experiment with financial encouragement from the city and a lot of sweat equity from its founders and supporters.

Enamorado, one of the gallery founders, remembers local businessman Mike Chirco donating all of the labor for the air conditioning, Elite Concrete donating labor to refinish the concrete floors, and Lowe's in Pico Rivera donating the wood for the stylish façade.

Regarding the façade, Enamorado recalls, "Warren High School students installed the wood on a Saturday morning as extra credit." A teacher organized the novice work crew and Porto's donated pastries.

A Presence Beyond Downey

Although the contract and between the city and Stay Arts ended in May, the issue of contract renewal appeared on the November 28 city council agenda because so many people wrote letters of support and showed up to speak during public comments at the prior council meeting.

Letters of support shared with the public on November photo exhibition for Farmers 14 include one from an assistant director at the J. director at Californians for the Arts, a director at Arts for LA, and the Chair of the Eastside Arts Initiative.

After eleven years of hard accomplishment work by so many people regularly set up chairs for Poetry Matters), it is clear that Stay Gallery and Stay Arts have brought acclaim to the city and created a presence beyond Downey.

It is to the city council's were flexible and agreed to reconsider a public discussion after this expansive show of support.

Considerations Moving Forward

There are several things worth considering if city officials want to build back the opportunities for residents to experience and participate in

One is to revisit past discussions about forming a

Commissions don't cost very much (members aren't paid) and they are advisory, not decision-making. And it's a certainty that appointees would be responsible with "the people's money" because Downey is known for its volunteerism and collaborative practices.

The establishment of a commission would show everyone that Downey knows how to inspire and harness

Another issue revisiting is the building at Furman Park that formerly housed the Downey Museum of Art. The building was donated for a museum in 1957, but political squabbling led to its closure in 2013, and it was later leased to the Downey Family YMCA for $1 per year for children's activities.

Not much has been happening with the building as YMCA officials and supporters are deep in fundraising for a new sports/health complex. Perhaps this would be an optimum site for Stay Arts Gallery. The building is on city property and a gallery there would have hundreds of visitors among the people who use the park every week.

Board member Manzanilla says one benefit of moving Stay Gallery to Furman Park is that "it allows us to be in a location that isn't under market pressure all the time, as far as rising rents and such. If the city does do further investment in that location, it belongs to the city.

"It belongs to the public. Whereas, any investment we make in the downtown building, ultimately, some day it will be returned to the market and we'll lose that."

An arts commission and the building at Furman Park are topics that should be included in long-range city planning.

For now, it would make sense for the good of the contribute their own community if the city council contract with Stay Arts that would allow Stay Gallery to remain open. Mayor Frometa is to be applauded for making this suggestion.
