Hospital's dumping case moves to trial

NORWALK – Most of the allegations in an alleged "patient dumping" lawsuit brought against a psychiatric hospital by a special education teacher with a bipolar disorder can move to trial, a judge ruled Tuesday.

The plaintiff, in her late 30s, is identified only as Jane Doe in the Norwalk Superior Court lawsuit she brought against College Hospital-Cerritos in May 2019. Doe alleges she was discharged in 2017 with little ability to care for herself.

"By discharging a mentally unstable woman to the street, defendants failed to protect plaintiff from the health and safety hazards to which a psychiatric patient is especially vulnerable upon discharge and abandoned and dumped plaintiff to the streets before her condition had stabilized," the suit alleges.

On Tuesday, Judge Lee W. Tsao denied most of the hospital's motion to dismiss parts of the case, although he did eliminate Dr. Manolito Fidel, who was Doe's treating psychiatrist, as a defendant, finding that the claims against him were time-barred.

However, the judge found that the claims against the hospital were not in violation of the statute of limitations. He also ruled that the hospital does not have legal immunity and that a jury will hear Doe's claims against the facility that include negligence and dependent adult abuse, and that the panel will decide whether to award Doe any punitive damages.

"Plaintiff presents evidence that demonstrates that triable issues of material fact exist as to whether (the hospital) acted recklessly ... by discharging plaintiff given her mental state at the time of discharge," the judge wrote.

In their court papers, the hospital's attorneys disputed Doe's version of events.

"Plaintiff's lawsuit reflects her retrospective, if not feigned, dissatisfaction with the determination by a certification hearing officer who protected her constitutional liberty rights, requiring her discharge," the hospital lawyers contended in their court pleadings.

After being taken by law enforcement to the hospital and being admitted in May 2017, management sought to extend Doe's 72-hour hold to 14 days, but she objected and wanted to be discharged after a full due process hearing, the hospital lawyers further stated in their court papers.

Prior to her release, Doe was instructed regarding her discharge

According to the suit, Doe has a psychiatric history of manic depression and generalized anxiety since 2008, with recurrent mania psychosis. In April 2017, Doe, who worked as a special education teacher, went missing from her Canoga Park home, leaving her cellphone, identification and her dog, the suit states.

Paging Dr. Frischer...

y Dr. Alan Frischer

When I first started practicing medicine, it was very common for women who reached menopause to go on hormone replacement therapy (HRT) to relieve symptoms and prevent osteoporosis. Some studies then suggested that it would also help to prevent heart disease.

This changed abruptly in link between HRT and an increased risk of blood clots, stroke, and breast and ovarian cancer. The results were complex: These and other conditions behave differently depending on the form of HRT, whether hormones are started around the time of menopause rather than later, and even the weight of the patient.

These 2002 findings on heart disease and breast cancer in women led to a sudden and marked reduction in the use of HRT, and subsequently to a significant drop in breast cancer rates. However, it also led to more women having to endure the often-debilitating symptoms of menopause and perimenopause.

Time passed. HRT is now referred to as menopausal hormone therapy (MHT). In 2022, the North American Menopause Society (NAMS) published a new position statement on MHT. Instead of issuing broad restrictions, the new recommendations state that the risks and benefits of hormone therapy should be discussed with each individual, and that the decision to use or not use MHT should be based on age, medical history, existing medical conditions and medications, and the severity of the symptoms. The data suggests that when MHT is started before the age of 60, or within 10 years of menopause without any medical contraindications, the benefits of MHT actually outweigh the risks.

Just what are those benefits? For some, the symptoms of menopause greatly affect quality of life, and can include hot flashes, night sweats, vaginal dryness and painful sex, weight gain, depression, joint pain, mood changes, insomnia, inability to concentrate, and a decreased sex drive. In addition to alleviating many of those symptoms, MHT may also protect against bone loss and fracture, lower the risk of diabetes and heart disease, prevent or reduce urinary tract infections, and relieve dry skin, nails, and eyes.

What are the potential risks of MHT? There is indeed a slightly increased risk of breast cancer: Less than one additional case of breast cancer occurs per 1,000 women per year of MHT use. This increases after five years of use. Women older than 60 or who begin MHT more than 10 years after the onset of menopause have a greater risk of blood clots, which can be fatal. The risk of heart disease and stroke can increase. Some of these risks are reduced with lower doses, and with the use of transdermal delivery methods rather than oral pills.

For some women, the risks of using MHT may still be too high, including those with a history of liver disease, heart disease, stroke, heart attack, blood clots, inherited history of increased risk for blood clots, or a personal history of estrogen-sensitive cancer.

However, benefits from menopausal hormone therapy may well outweigh risks for those who are healthy and have moderate to severe hot flashes, have other significant symptoms of menopause, need to prevent bone loss or fracture, experience early menopause, or have certain estrogen deficiencies.

To determine if hormone therapy is a good treatment option for you, speak with your doctor about your individual symptoms and health risks. This science is evolving rapidly, and as more is learned about hormone therapy and other menopausal treatments, these recommendations will continue to change.

Legislative changes could transform California into a rodent haven

California is considering giving rodents legal protection and the implications are wide.

By Renee Pinel

Renee Pinel is the president and CEO of Western Plant Health (WPH), a Sacramento-based trade association whose member companies promote the environmentally safe and agronomically sound use of their products.

"Two Rats Can Become 15,000 In One Year." (National Geographic, 5/9/13)

provision, in effect, gives rodents human status.

To complicate matters, "harassment" is broadly defined. "Harassment" includes injury to an animal by annoying it to such an extent as to disrupt normal behavioral patterns, including, but not limited to, breeding, feeding, or sheltering.

The implications of AB 2552 are concerning as it could drastically limit the use of rodenticides, which are vital for protecting the public and food supplies from rodentborne diseases.

The U.S. National Park Service notes that rodents are carriers of fatal diseases and directly transmit several viruses, including hantavirus, leptospirosis, listeria, rat bite fever, rat lung disease, and salmonellosis. "These pathogens can infect humans through various routes, including direct handling, bites, or contact (through breathing in air or eating food) with feces, urine, or saliva. They also serve as the hosts for ectoparasite vectors (such as ticks or fleas) that transmit other diseases, including Lyme disease, bubonic plague, tularemia, murine typhus, and tick-borne relapsing fever."

The U.S. will have to intervene in Haiti

By James B. Foley

James B. Foley was U.S. ambassador to Haiti from 2003 to 2005.

Haiti is a story that appears to repeat itself while also growing inexorably worse over time. Secretary of State Antony Blinken's recent meeting in Jamaica with fractious Haitian political and civil society leaders recalled a similar moment when I was U.S. ambassador to Haiti 20 years ago. Back then, the worst outcomes were avoided through decisive American intervention. Today's crisis might require it as well.

In late February 2004, Port-au-Prince was falling into chaos. Criminal gangs loyal to then-President Jean-Bertrand Aristide were on a rampage, even as a ragtag band of ex-military thugs led by warlord Guy Philippe pressed on the capital, seeking to topple the government. In a last-ditch attempt to forge compromise between the opposition and Aristide, I arranged for Secretary of State Colin Powell to call in to my meeting with heads of political parties and civil society representatives. Powell's impassioned pledge of U.S. support was roundly rejected. From that point forward, my aim was to thwart the designs of those in the room — now obviously aligned with the approaching rebel forces — while also pressuring Aristide to rein in his lawless gangs.

A bloodbath seemed imminent. It was altogether unclear which side would prevail — and whether any government that emerged from the carnage would be one the international community could recognize and support. Aristide finally lost his nerve, contacting me to request the United States arrange his ascape from the country. We then United States arrange his escape from the country. We then outflanked coup plotters by facilitating the swearing-in of his constitutional successor as president. But it was only thanks to the timely arrival of about 2,000 U.S. Marines that anarchy was avoided and an interim government was established in a Haitian-run process.

Haiti's dysfunction is a permanent condition that continues to force itself upon the agenda of American policymakers. Time and again, they find themselves confronting a reality that is almost impossible for outsiders to comprehend. In Haiti's political culture, trust and a willingness to compromise are virtually nonexistent, with political actors locked in an endless power struggle. In a country suffering from a massive mismatch between state capacity and society's needs, issues of governance are shockingly absent from the political agenda. Even for an external actor as powerful as the United States, Haiti is a natural graveyard for the best-intentioned policies.

Today, Washington is once again desperately trying to piece together a transitional political arrangement, having too long propped up the feckless Ariel Henry as prime minister. It is in a race against time, and, in my view, it is unlikely to succeed, or even get international security

- "Olvera Street Merchants Concerned About Homeless, Rampant Rats." (KTLA 5, 10/6/23)

These headlines above highlight the real dangers of rodents.

In 2023, four California cities were ranked among the most rodent-infested in the United States. In light of these concerns, we are addressing and educating members of the California State Legislature and state regulators about the health and economic dangers posed by recently introduced legislation, Assembly Bill 2552.

This bill, introduced by Assemblymember Laura Friedman (D-Burbank), seeks to ban first- and second-generation rodenticides in any "open space" with a 5,000-foot buffer zone while giving rodents unprecedented legal protection.

AB 2552 would redefine wildlife areas as any "open space," requiring a substantial 5,000 ft buffer zone, and does not include any exemptions for agricultural use. It also allows individuals the right to sue (private right of action) rodenticide applicators that "harass," not necessarily kill, any wildlife species or pest. This

These diseases have critical health implications, from respiratory issues and asthma—especially in children—to food contamination on farms, in homes, and restaurants.

Students and teachers at Villa Park Elementary School "were covered in itchy, red bites after rats invaded an elementary school in Southern California." CBS Los Angeles reported that "rats were found underneath some portable classrooms. Health officials said the bumps that were reported by the students and faculty were caused by tiny bugs that live on rats." After the news broke, vector control workers were sent to eradicate the rodents.

In the agricultural sector, roof rats can run rampant in California orchards, according to UC Agriculture and Natural Resources scientists. "In pistachio and other nut orchards, roof rats are burrowing and nesting in the ground where they're chewing on irrigation lines, causing extensive damage," said Rachael Long, UC Cooperative Extension advisor. And it's not just the fruit damage. They nest in citrus trees, feeding on the fruit and terrifying field workers when they jump out as people are picking the fruit. The chewing pests are also girdling tree limbs, causing branch dieback.'

Maintaining the use of rodenticides is supported by their proven effectiveness. California's Integrated Pest Management Programs, which include rodenticides, are essential for preventing and eradicating pests.

California's stringent regulations on rodenticide applications and decades of scientific and health-related studies show that rodenticides protect public health and the environment, highlighting the necessity of these tools for pest control.

into the country, without providing U.S. military cover.

However, the Biden administration appears determined to avoid participating in any international security mission in Haiti, even as famine lurks and what remains of state institutions and public infrastructure is being eradicated. This represents an extraordinary break with the U.S. approach to the Caribbean since the late 19th century. The decision is probably being driven by the overwhelming demands and potential contingencies confronting U.S. military forces in Europe, Asia and the Middle East. But while an overstretched United States might need to reconfigure its global posture, withdrawing from the Western Hemisphere will always be impossible.

Among the international community's many mistakes and failures over the decades, perhaps none was more fateful than the decision — supported by the Trump administration - to withdraw all U.N. military and police personnel from Haiti between 2017 and 2019. The absence of a credible Haitian security force led to the progressive collapse of state institutions and opened the door to the anarchy now gripping the country.

In the current crisis, many are calling for Haitian-led or even Haitian-only solutions, but this is unrealistic in view of the security situation. Haiti's outgunned and outnumbered police force has fought bravely to preserve the state, but it might not hold out against criminal gangs that have recently formed an alliance to seize power. In these dire circumstances, it is extremely difficult to imagine how any legitimate interim government can be formed. It is more likely that Philippe, who was inexplicably returned by Washington to Haiti four months ago after serving a federal sentence for drug-related money laundering, will succeed where he came up short 20 years ago — when he was blocked by U.S. diplomats at the gates of the National Palace.

If that comes to pass, the United States will face a failed state run by criminals and narco-traffickers about 700 miles from Florida. Even a future Trump administration professing indifference to human suffering in Haiti would have to grapple with manifold law enforcement and national security problems spreading to our shores.

A military intervention in Haiti is understandably abhorrent to the Biden administration given the multiple security challenges the United States is juggling around the world. But the situation has deteriorated to the point that Washington might have no choice but to mount an abbreviated operation to supplant the gangs and facilitate a political transition.

With a new government in place, the United States could rapidly hand security responsibility over to the international community, anchored by a Kenyan police detachment already approved by the United Nations. But without it, the chances of a final meltdown and a more substantial intervention will continue to grow.

The total amount of the unpaid principal balance. interest thereon, together with reasonably estimated costs, expenses and advances at the time of the initial publication of the Notice of Trustee's Sale is $269,949.24. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO TENANT: You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase.
