Norwalk to use $2.1M for water infrastructure and transit upgrades

NORWALK - Rep. Linda Sanchez delivered a $2.1 million check to the city of Norwalk last redistricting. week, federal funding she secured for Norwalk and signed into law by President Joe Biden.

Norwalk will use $1.26 million to design and construct water facilities, including injection wells, recharge facilities, pipelines, reservoirs and treatment plants.

These projects will aim to extract, treat and distribute groundwater and imported supplies from the Central Groundwater Basin, enhancing water infrastructure within the city.

The remaining $850,000 will be used to enhance Norwalk Transit with shade, seating and solarpowered lighting.

The solar panels will provide ample lighting while real-time displays powered by these panels will provide accurate wait times for bus riders.

■The expansion will allow Cerritos College to offer more childcare services for its students.

NORWALK - Rep. Linda T. Sánchez secured $1 million in federal funding to support the expansion of Cerritos College's Child Development Center (CDC).

The funding comes from the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2024, which President Biden signed into law on Congresswoman Sánchez presented the check to the college at its State of the College address on March 27.

Sánchez's securing funds will be in addition to the $782,000 in state funding secured by California Assemblymember Blanca Pacheco in 2023. Together, the funding will support the CDC's planned expansion to meet growing demands and educational services to our community.

The funding is crucial to Cerritos College's goal eliminating educational barriers for our students. Inadequate access to affordable and quality childcare is one support of our program. It of the most common barriers is our goal to enhance our cited by student parents.

Through the expansion of the CDC, Cerritos College will be able to offer more worldclass childcare services for our students and provide greater early childhood education award-winning students.

"The new federal funding brings us one step closer to expanding the CDC facility and increasing its offerings with more flexible formats," Cerritos President/Superintendent Dr. Jose Fierro. "We are grateful for Congresswoman Sánchez's acclaimed childcare services, hands-on student training, and access to education to better serve our community and our students."

"I'm proud to deliver this training opportunities for our check to Cerritos College's Child Development Center," said Sánchez. "We all know the benefits high-quality childcare brings to families. This funding will help ensure the center can continue to provide that service to our community while training the teachers of tomorrow."

Filing tax returns shouldn't be this hard

Congress won't simplify the tax code but technology can make filing less painful.

By Bill Harris

Bill Harris ran TurboTax, and was the co-founding CEO of PayPal. He is the author of "The Investment Tax Guide."

In February, the IRS commissioner defended his agency at a congressional hearing centered on the country's arduous tax code and filing process at a time when some in Congress want to cut IRS funding. While the questioning was ripe with partisan politics, there was a common thread that most politicians and taxpayers could agree on: the need to use technology to make the tax process easier for taxpayers and the IRS itself.

As the former CEO of Intuit, I ran TurboTax for 10 years and have founded multiple financial technology firms since. The question I hear over and over from US taxpayers is: "Why is it so hard to do my taxes?"

The root cause is the complexity of our federal and state tax laws. When the income tax was first enacted in 1913, the tax code was just 27 pages long.

New laws and amendments have since expanded it to more than 17,000 pages. Not only is the tax code incredibly lengthy, it also is frequently changing, with an average of 399 changes each year from 2000 through 2022.

During this tax season, for example, lawmakers are debating changes to the child tax credit, which could impact how families file by April 15. These changes naturally lead to confusion, but the IRS doesn't have enough resources to provide help. In 2022, only 13% of taxpayers calling the IRS were able to speak with a live person.

Our problem is rare in the developed world — the tax systems in other countries, such as the Netherlands and Japan, are so simple that most taxpayers can file in a few hours or less. But in the US, the average American spends 13 hours filing taxes, which costs the US economy $260 billion in labor.

Unfortunately, there is no prospect of radical simplification of the tax laws. Both political parties use the tax code as a tool to advance their political agendas, from President Abraham Lincoln using the federal income tax to pay for the Civil War to President Barack Obama amending the tax code to make passing The Affordable Care Act possible. At this point, untying that Gordian knot is practically impossible.

So, we must look to technology to address the problem. The answer is threefold:

(1) The IRS must rebuild its internal systems to process tax forms, which rely on software that is decades old. Outdated infrastructure not only leads to massive inefficiencies, but also puts taxpayers' personal information at risk to cyberattacks. Without modern technology, delays within the agency compound. As of October 2023, 69.5% of the IRS' inventory, which includes amended returns, was delayed. Of course, these gaps impact taxpayers waiting for information and returns, but they also harm the government, as the IRS must pay interest on overpayments it does not refund in a timely manner

(2) External, customer-facing tax preparation capabilities also need to be drastically improved. Both the IRS and the states must build online portals to make the filing of very simple tax forms easier, cheaper and faster. The good news is that pilot programs are underway and will be available to help more people over the next few years — as long as they have the proper funding.

(3) The tax software industry at large should embrace the coexistence of government and privately supported tax preparation portals. Government efforts such as the current pilots are long overdue and indisputably commendable, yet are unlikely to be sufficient for taxpayers with more complex returns, such as anyone with investment income. These taxpayers will always need — and greatly benefit from — the sophisticated software that private companies produce. The IRS and private-sector providers need each other and should be natural partners.

It is a shame that this urgent issue has devolved into a partisan political debate. Budget cuts would delay modernization efforts by many years, if not indefinitely. Let Congress debate about how to simplify the tax code and let the non-partisan staffers at the IRS get on with the onerous process of updating their technology.

The troubling trend in cancer cases

Early-onset cancer is on the rise and nutrition may be to blame.

By Jalal Baig

Dr. Jalal Baig is a physician and writer based in Chicago whose work has appeared in The Washington Post, NBC News, The Atlantic, Foreign Policy and other publications.

The recent revelation of the cancer diagnosis of Catherine, Princess of Wales, who is 42, has left many observers shocked. As a medical oncologist, I am heartbroken — but hardly surprised.

Early-onset cancer, which is defined as happening in adults under 50 years of age, is no anomaly. In fact, it is part of a rising global trend in which newly diagnosed cancer patients are getting younger. Further, it deflates the myth that cancer is the preserve of older people.

During the past week alone, I saw a 37-year-old with breast cancer that had already metastasized to her lymph nodes, bones, lung and liver. In the room next door was a 45-year-old with colon cancer that had spread so diffusely throughout the liver that it had become packed and enlarged with the tumors. Both patients had stage IV cancers that can potentially be controlled for a finite time but are no longer curable.

The global incidence of early-onset cancer increased by 79.1% and early-onset cancer deaths rose by 27.7% from 1990 to 2019, a 2023 study in the journal BMJ Oncology found. More granular data on this uptick published last year in the Journal of the American Medical Association showed that from 2010 to 2019 in the United States, breast cancer accounted for the highest number of cases in this younger population, while rates of gastrointestinal cancers were rising the fastest.

This jarring increase in gastrointestinal cancers alone captures the implications and risks associated with a person's birth year. As Dr. Kimmie Ng, a medical oncologist at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, told The Boston Globe last year, "People born in 1990 have over double the risk of getting colon cancer compared to those born in 1950. And quadruple the risk of getting rectal cancer."

As these cases of early-onset cancers mount, there is added urgency to identify why this rise in cancer among younger people is unfolding and who is at heightened risk. At least part of the answer appears to be found in the changes to nutrition and lifestyle that took hold in the middle of the last century.

Notably, the population's underlying genetic risks haven't changed in the past several decades, bolstering the case that environment and lifestyle have a greater role in these cancers than our genes. Culprits may include ultraprocessed foods, sugary drinks, red meat, smoking, alcohol, sleep alterations, obesity and physical inactivity. Alone and especially in concert, these factors can alter the internal processes of our bodies by upsetting metabolism and ratcheting up inflammation.

Further research efforts are underway examining whether changes in the gut microbiome, the trillions of microbes that reside inside us, are increasing our bodies' vulnerability to cancer. This community of microbes is a crucial contributor to health, affecting digestion and the immune system. Poor diet, excessive antibiotic use and certain medicines can cause an upheaval in this microbiome, which could then play a role in facilitating cancer.

Because cancer is a disease understood to develop over decades as changes in DNA accumulate and spawn tumors, a person diagnosed at a younger age may have been exposed to risk factors as a baby or in utero. Research is also focused here currently, with studies associating greater risk with cesarean delivery in females and a synthetic form of progesterone used to prevent premature labor.

But as I have seen regularly in my own cancer clinic, obesity and lifestyle alone cannot account for all the young patients being diagnosed. Many whom I am treating are healthy, eat judiciously and exercise regularly. And so causation for their diseases still remains beyond science's grasp.

As Dr. Suneel Kamath, a gastrointestinal medical oncologist at the Cleveland Clinic Taussig Cancer Institute and member of the newly launched Center for Young-Onset Colorectal Cancer at the Cleveland Clinic, told me,

"The short answer is we really don't know."

The one certainty at this moment, however, is that underdiagnosis of these early-onset cancers is prevalent and consequential. Primary care physicians need to be educated on the rising presence of cancer in those younger than 50 and why age should not be used to downplay a presenting patient's symptoms.

On the other side, people should not neglect persistent symptoms of any kind and be cognizant of a family history of cancer. Often, young patients will have to advocate aggressively for themselves since it can take multiple appointments before a cancer diagnosis is made.

And because early-onset cancers are often diagnosed at advanced stages, they were once thought to be biologically different and more pernicious than their older counterparts. Often, these are simply found late and metastasized because of a delay in diagnosis and not due to any particularly aggressive quality.

Once treatment starts, the stakes are also different for those in their 20s, 30s and 40s. Cancer drugs can cause cardiovascular issues and secondary cancers years after treatment. Younger patients may be pregnant at the start of therapy or worry about the effects on fertility. Further, there are concerns about long-term cognitive damage after chemotherapy, especially as people return to work.

"It is disconcerting talking to people about missing class for college and parental responsibilities while getting chemotherapy," Kamath added. "These people should not be dealing with this."

This unsettling phenomenon in cancer care will necessitate a redoubling of our collective efforts for funding, further research, education campaigns and revision of screening guidelines.

Already, much of this is in motion. In a notable move, the US Preventive Services Task Force, a volunteer panel of experts in disease prevention, now recommends that colorectal cancer screening should start at age 45 for people at average risk of the disease.

Even as considerable advances have been made in cancer outcomes, true progress can't be declared if certain age groups are worryingly falling behind. The Princess of Wales' public disclosure of her cancer is a reminder of the work left to do.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF BARBARA CHRISTINE NICHOLS CASE NO. 24STPB02966

PROBATE

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may otherwise be interested in the WILL or estate, or both of BARBARA CHRISTINE NICHOLS.
A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by SHERRY L. FOX in the Superior Court of California, County of LOS ANGELES.
THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that SHERRY L. FOX be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and A HEARING on the petition will be held in this court as follows: 04/16/24 at 8:30AM in Dept. 79 located at 111 N. HILL ST., LOS ANGELES, CA 90012
IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

MAESTRO

■ Seventeen years into her role as conductor of the Downey Symphony Orchestra, Sharon Lavery remains as motivated as ever.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

hen you listen to the Downey Symphony Orchestra, the performance is that of each musician, the arrangements and compositions of the composers who wrote them.

And it's Sharon Lavery who is tasked with bringing it all together.

"I think I figured out that as a conductor, most of our job, in my opinion, is problem solving," said Lavery. "When you have an ensemble in front of you, and you need to make it sound good, and you need to make the music sound beautiful, you've got to problem solve, and you've got to figure out who needs help here, and who needs help there, and let's get the trombones to play with the trumpets.

"I think that me, personally, I'm a problem solver, I'm like that. Some people are, some people aren't. I think part of that really attracted me to conducting – being in front of a group and problem solving to figure out how to make them sound good."

Lavery, 54, has led the Downey Symphony Orchestra as its music director since 2007.

She says she fell "in love with the organization from the first season."

"I just remember thinking, 'Well, I'm just going to do this until they kick me out," said Lavery.

As musical director, Lavery is responsible for the musical selections of each performance. Once a concert has been selected, Lavery analyzes each piece, breaking down each harmony, phrase, dynamic direction, and cue in preparation to lead the ensemble.

Still, she says most of the music "is already there."

"All of this music is already there. The majority of it, the music is already there," said Lavery. "My job is to bring out all the nuances. Whatever Beethoven wrote, if he wrote a crescendo here, and they don't give a full crescendo to where I think Beethoven wanted them to go, that's my job: to dig into what he wrote and exaggerate the dynamics, exaggerate the phrasing, exaggerate the articulation.

"That's my job, but could they do a lot of this music without me? Probably. It all depends on the repertoire."

Most conductors don't start off with batons in their hands; neither did Lavery.

Born and raised in Ossining, New York, Lavery began her life in music early in the fourth grade, when she found herself mesmerized by her school band teacher and his clarinet.

"When you're in an early grade, the band teacher comes around and demonstrates on all the instruments, and then if you want to be in the band program you have to choose an instrument," said Lavery. "[My teacher] was demonstrating all the instruments, and when he got to that clarinet, he made it sound unbelievable. He started from the low register and went all the way up to the high register. I remember like it was yesterday; I remember thinking to myself, 'I want to sound like that.'

"Later I found out – this was like 10, 12 years later – he was a professional clarinetist. So, probably my young fourth grade ear probably picked up that he clearly sounded the best on this particular instrument, and I just didn't know it at the time."

Following that introduction, Lavery continued her upbringing in band, orchestra, and even some jazz along the way.

Her real passion, however, would be in education.

"As I was getting ready to figure out what I wanted to do with my life, I always knew that I wanted to teach. That was first and foremost," said Lavery. "I wasn't sure what that would mean, but as I started becoming a little more serious with my music, it just dawned on me, 'You know, I think I'm just going to keep doing this music thing and teach music.'"

Lavery pursued music education at Michigan State University, earning her bachelors.

While there, she discovered a new passion in music: conducting.

"As part of music education, you have to take conducting courses," said Lavery. "I supposed that's probably where I was bit by the conducting bug, taking some of those courses in my college days. I was also drum major in high school, which put me up in front of a group, so that might have started things as well."

After finishing her undergraduate degree, Lavery thought to herself that "there was only one way to become a good conductor."

"That is to master an instrument first," said Lavery. "So I decided to continue my clarinet performing and went to New England Conservatory to get a masters in clarinet performance.

"I feel strongly that in order to be a conductor, you really have to master an instrument first and become a first-rate musician before you can start getting in front of an ensemble; that's just my own philosophy."

Still, Lavery says that she would take some additional conducting courses because of her own interest.

Upon finishing her masters, Lavery says it was time to "get a job."

"I got a job teaching in the public school system for five years," said Lavery. "While I was teaching high school and elementary... in the summers I was taking these conducting seminars where they're specifically geared towards learning conducting, and they have musicians play for you.

"I was doing those things in the summer because I always had that dream of becoming a conductor."

After teaching in the public school system, Lavery "bit the bullet" at the age of 29 and moved out west to audition for and join USC's conducting program.

"I moved out here, not a dime in my pocket, but I did it," said Lavery. "After I got my degree in conducting, I got a job as the orchestra manager at USC."

Lavery says that "things just started happening" and that she was "in the right place at the right time."

"We needed a resident conductor for the wind ensemble, and I auditioned for that job, and I won that job," said Lavery. "For a while there, I was both managing the orchestra and I was the resident conductor of the wind ensemble."

Lavery is currently the resident conductor of the Thornton Symphony, Chamber Orchestra, and Thornton Winds at USC, and the department chair for the wind and percussion department. She also served as music director of the Thornton Concert Orchestra for seven years, and teaches instrumental conducting at varying

This weekend, Lavery will once again lead the Downey Symphony's "Springtime" Concert, featuring performances of Beethoven's Coriolan Overture, Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 4 "Italian," and Mozart's Piano Concert No. 20 in D minor with Cameron Akioka on piano.

Admittedly, the Downey Symphony has struggled bringing in audiences since the Covid-19 pandemic. Lavery hopes to turn things around.

"We're trying to find our way through financial challenges; we just are," said Lavery. "Covid, in my opinion, has hurt us a little bit as far as audience attendance. I don't know if people are just still nervous to be in crowds.

"I don't know, but that's what I'm concentrating on, is how to help us stay vibrant and healthy as an organization. So I just want to keep going."
